GO WHERE GLORY WAITS THEE.

Go where glory waits thee,
But while fame elates thee,
 Oh ! still remember me.
When the praise thou meetest
To thine ear is sweetest,
 Oh ! then remember me.
Other arms may press thee,
Dearer friends caress thee,
All the joys that bless thee
 Sweeter far may be ;
But when friends are nearest,
And when joys are dearest,
 Oh ! then remember me !

When, at eve, thou rovest
By the star thou lovest,
 Oh ! then remember me.
Think, when home returning,
Bright we've seen it burning,
 Oh ! thus remember me.

Oft as summer closes,
When thine eye reposes,
On its ling'ring roses,
Once so loved by thee,
Think of her who wove them,
Her who made thee love them,
Oh ! then remember me.

When, around thee dying,
Autumn leaves are lying,
Oh ! then remember me.
And, at night, when gazing
On the gay hearth blazing,
Oh ! still remember me.
Then should music, stealing
All the soul of feeling,
To thy heart appealing,
Draw one tear from thee ;
Then let memory bring thee
Strains I used to sing thee,—
Oh ! then remember me.

REMEMBER THE GLORIES OF BRIEN THE BRAVE.*

WAR SONG.

REMEMBER the glories of Brien the brave,
Though the days of the hero are o'er;
Though lost to Mononia,† and cold in the grave,
He returns to Kinkora‡ no more.
That star of the field, which so often hath poured
Its beam on the battle, is set;
But enough of its glory remains on each sword,
To light us to victory yet.

Mononia ! when Nature embellished the tint
Of thy fields, and thy mountains so fair,
Did she ever intend that a tyrant should print
The footstep of slavery there ?
No ! Freedom, whose smile we shall never resign,
Go, tell our invaders, the Danes,
That 'tis sweeter to bleed for an age at thy shrine,
Than to sleep but a moment in chains.

* Brien Borombe, the great Monarch of Ireland, who was killed at the battle of Clontarf, in the beginning of the 11th century, after having defeated the Danes in twenty-five engagements.

† Munster.

‡ The palace of Brien.

Forget not our wounded companions, who stood*
 In the day of distress by our side ;
 While the moss of the valley grew red with their blood,
 They stirred not, but conquered and died.
 That sun which now blesses our arms with his light
 Saw them fall upon Ossory's plain ;—
 Oh ! let him not blush, when he leaves us to-night,
 To find that they fell there in vain.

OH ! BREATHE NOT HIS NAME.

OH ! breathe not his name, let it sleep in the shade,
 Where cold and unhonored his relics are laid ;
 Sad, silent, and dark, be the tears that we shed,
 As the night-dew that falls on the grass o'er his head.

But the night-dew that falls, though in silence it weeps,
 Shall brighten with verdure the grave where he sleeps ;
 And the tear that we shed, though in secret it rolls,
 Shall long keep his memory green in our souls.

* This alludes to an interesting circumstance related of the Dalgais, the favorite troops of Brien, when they were interrupted in their return from the battle of Clontarf, by Fitzpatrick, Prince of Ossory. The wounded men entreated that they might be allowed to fight with the rest.—“ Let stakes (they said) be stuck in the ground, and suffer each of us, tied to and supported by one of these stakes, to be placed in his rank by the side of a sound man. ” “ Between seven and eight hundred wounded men (adds O'Halloran), pale, emaciated, and supported in this manner, appeared mixed with the foremost of the troops ;—never was such another sight exhibited.”—History of Ireland, book xii. chap. i.

ERIN ! THE TEAR AND THE SMILE IN THINE EYES.

ERIN ! the tear and the smile in thine eyes
Blend like the rainbow that hangs in thy skies !
Shining through sorrow's stream,
Saddening through pleasure's beam,
Thy suns with doubtful gleam
Weep while they rise.

Erin ! thy silent tear never shall cease,
Erin ! thy languid smile ne'er shall increase,
Till, like the rainbow's light,
Thy various tints unite,
And form in Heaven's sight
One arch of peace !

WHEN HE, WHO ADORES THEE.

WHEN he, who adores thee, has left but the name
 Of his faults and his sorrows behind,
Oh ! say wilt thou weep, when they darken the fame
 Of a life that for thee was resigned ?
Yes, weep, and however my foes may condemn,
 Thy tears shall efface their decree ;
For Heaven can witness, though guilty to them,
 I have been but too faithful to thee.

With thee were the dreams of my earliest love ;
 Every thought of my reason was thine ;
In my last humble prayer to the Spirit above,
 Thy name shall be mingled with mine.
Oh ! blest are the lovers and friends who shall live
 The days of thy glory to see ;
But the next dearest blessing that Heaven can give
 Is the pride of thus dying for thee.

THE HARP THAT ONCE THROUGH TARA'S HALLS.

THE harp that once through Tara's halls
 The soul of music shed,
Now hangs as mute on Tara's walls
 As if that soul were fled.
So sleeps the pride of former days,
 So glory's thrill is o'er,
And hearts, that once beat high for praise,
 Now feel that pulse no more.

No more to chiefs and ladies bright
 The harp of Tara swells :
The chord alone, that breaks at night,
 Its tale of ruin tells.
Thus Freedom now so seldom wakes,
 The only throb she gives
Is when some heart indignant breaks,
 To show that still she lives.

FLY NOT YET.

FLY not yet, 'tis just the hour
When pleasure, like the midnight flower
That scorns the eye of vulgar light,
Begins to bloom for sons of night,

And maids who love the moon.

'Twas but to bless these hours of shade
That beauty and the moon were made;
'Tis then their soft attractions glowing,
Set the tides and goblets flowing.

Oh! stay,—Oh! stay,—
Joy so seldom weaves a chain
Like this to-night, that oh! 'tis pain
To break its links so soon.

Fly not yet; the fount that played
In times of old through Ammon's shade,*
Though icy cold by day it ran,
Yet still, like souls of mirth, began
To burn when night was near.

And thus should woman's heart and looks
At noon be cold as winter brooks,
Nor kindle till the night, returning,
Brings their genial hour for burning.

Oh! stay,—Oh! stay,—
When did morning ever break,
And find such beaming eyes awake
As those that sparkle here?

* Solis Fons, near the Temple of Ammon.

OH! THINK NOT MY SPIRITS ARE ALWAYS AS LIGHT.

OH! think not my spirits are always as light,

And as free from a pang, as they seem to you now ;
Nor expect that the heart-beaming smile of to-night

Will return with to-morrow to brighten my brow.

No :—life is a waste of wearisome hours,

Which seldom the rose of enjoyment adorns ;
And the heart that is soonest awake to the flowers

Is always the first to be touched by the thorns.

But send round the bowl, and be happy awhile :—

May we never meet worse, in our pilgrimage here,
Than the tear that enjoyment may gild with a smile,

And the smile that compassion can turn to a tear !

The thread of our life would be dark, Heaven knows !

If it were not with friendship and love intertwined ;
And I care not how soon I may sink to repose,

When these blessings shall cease to be dear to my mind.
But they who have loved the fondest, the purest,

Too often have wept o'er the dream they believed ;
And the heart that has slumbered in friendship securest

Is happy, indeed, if 'twas never deceived.

But send round the bowl : while a relic of truth

Is in man or in woman, this prayer shall be mine,—
That the sunshine of love may illumine our youth,

And the moonlight of friendship console our decline.

THOUGH THE LAST GLIMPSE OF ERIN WITH SORROW I SEE.

THOUGH the last glimpse of Erin with sorrow I see,
Yet wherever thou art shall seem Erin to me;
In exile thy bosom shall still be my home,
And thine eyes make my climate wherever we roam.

To the gloom of some desert or cold rocky shore,
Where the eye of the stranger can hunt us no more,
I will fly with my Coulin, and think the rough wind
Less rude than the foes we leave frowning behind.

And I'll gaze on thy gold hair as graceful it wreathes,
And hang o'er thy soft harp, as wildly it breathes
Nor dread that the cold-hearted Saxon will tear
One chord from that harp, or one lock from that hair.*

* "In the twenty-eighth year of the reign of Henry VIII. an Act was made respecting the habits, and dress in general, of the Irish, whereby all persons were restrained from being shorn or shaven above the ears, or from wearing Glibbes, or Coulings (long locks), on their heads, or hair on their upper lip, called Crommeal. On this occasion a song was written by one of our bards, in which an Irish virgin is made to give the preference to her dear Coulin (or the youth with the flowing locks) to all strangers (by which the English were meant), or those who wore their habits. Of this song the air alone has reached us, and is universally admired."—WALKER'S Historical Memoirs of Irish Bards, p. 134. Mr. Walker informs us, also, that about the same period there were some harsh measures taken against the Irish Minstrels.

RICH AND RARE WERE THE GEMS SHE WORE.*

RICH and rare were the gems she wore,
And a bright gold ring on her wand she bore;
But oh ! her beauty was far beyond
Her sparkling gems, or snow-white wand.

“Lady ! dost thou not fear to stray
So lone and lovely through this bleak way ?
Are Erin’s sons so good or so cold,
As not to be tempted by woman or gold ?”

“Sir Knight ! I feel not the least alarm,
No son of Erin will offer me harm :—
For, though they love woman and golden store,
Sir Knight ! they love honor and virtue more.”

On she went, and her maiden smile
In safety lighted her round the green isle ;
And blest for ever is she who relied Upon Erin’s honor and Erin’s pride.

* This ballad is founded upon the following anecdote :—“The people were inspired with such a spirit of honor, virtue, and religion, by the great example of Brien, and by his excellent administration, that, as a proof of it, we are informed that a young lady of great beauty, adorned with jewels and a costly dress, undertook a journey alone, from one end of the kingdom to the other, with a wand only in her hand, at the top of which was a ring of exceeding great value ; and such an impression had the laws and government of this monarch made on the minds of all the people, that no attempt was made upon her honor, nor was she robbed of her clothes or jewels.”—WARNER’S History of Ireland, vol. i. book x.

AS A BEAM O'ER THE FACE OF THE WATERS
MAY GLOW.

As a beam o'er the face of the waters may glow,
While the tide runs in darkness and coldness below,
So the cheek may be tinged with a warm sunny smile,
Though the cold heart to ruin runs darkly the while.

One fatal remembrance, one sorrow that throws
Its bleak shade alike o'er our joys and our woes,
To which life nothing darker or brighter can bring,
For which joy has no balm and affliction no sting—

Oh ! this thought in the midst of enjoyment will stay,
Like a dead leafless branch in the summer's bright ray ;
The beams of the warm sun play round it in vain,
It may smile in his light, but it blooms not again.

THE MEETING OF THE WATERS.*

THERE is not in this wide world a valley so sweet
As that vale in whose bosom the bright waters meet;†
Oh! the last rays of feeling and life must depart,
Ere the bloom of that valley shall fade from my heart.

Yet it was not that Nature had shed o'er the scene
Her purest of crystal and brightest of green;
'Twas not her soft magic of streamlet or hill,
Oh! no—it was something more exquisite still.

'Twas that friends, the beloved of my bosom, were near,
Who made every dear scene of enchantment more dear,
And who felt how the best charms of nature improve,
When we see them reflected from looks that we love.

Sweet vale of Avoca! how calm could I rest
In thy bosom of shade, with the friends I love best,
Where the storms that we feel in this cold world should cease,
And our hearts, like thy waters, be mingled in peace.

* "The Meeting of the Waters" forms a part of that beautiful scenery which lies between Rathdrum and Arklow, in the county of Wicklow; and these lines were suggested by a visit to this romantic spot, in the summer of the year 1807.

† The rivers Avon and Avoca.

ST. SENANUS AND THE LADY.

ST. SENANUS.*

“OH! haste and leave this sacred isle,
 Unholy bark, ere morning smile;
 For on thy deck, though dark it be,
 A female form I see;
 And I have sworn this sainted sod
 Shall ne'er by woman's feet be trod.”

THE LADY.

“Oh! Father, send not hence my bark,
 Through wintry winds and billows dark:
 I come with humble heart to share
 Thy morn and evening prayer;

* In a metrical life of St. Senanus, which is taken from an old Kilkenny MS., and may be found among the Acta Sanctorum Hiberniæ, we are told of his flight to the island of Scattery, and his resolution not to admit any woman of the party; he refused to receive even a sister saint St. Cannera, whom an angel had taken to the island for the express purpose of introducing her to him. The following was the ungracious answer of Senanus, according to his poetical biographer:—

*Cui Præsul: Quid fæminis
 Commune est cum monachis?
 Nec te nec ullam aliam
 Admittemus in insulam.*

See the Acta Sanct. Hib. p. 610.

According to Dr. Ledwich, St. Senanus was no less a personage than the river Shannon; but O'Connor and other antiquarians deny the metamorphose indignantly.

Nor mine the feet, oh ! holy Saint,
The brightness of thy sod to taint."

The Lady's prayer Senanus spurned ;
The winds blew fresh, the bark returned ;
But legends hint, that had the maid
Till morning's light delayed,
And given the saint one rosy smile,
She ne'er had left his lonely isle.

HOW DEAR TO ME THE HOUR.

How dear to me the hour when daylight dies,
And sunbeams melt along the silent sea,
For then sweet dreams of other days arise,
And memory breathes her vesper sigh to thee.

And, as I watch the line of light, that plays
Along the smooth wave toward the burning west,
I long to tread that golden path of rays,
And think 'twould lead to some bright isle of rest.

TAKE BACK THE VIRGIN PAGE.

WRITTEN ON RETURNING A BLANK BOOK.

TAKE back the virgin page,
White and unwritten still ;
Some hand, more calm and sage,
The leaf must fill.
Thoughts come as pure as light,
Pure as even you require :
But oh ! each word I write
Love turns to fire.

Yet let me keep the book :
Oft shall my heart renew,
When on its leaves I look,
Dear thoughts of you.
Like you, 'tis fair and bright ;
Like you, too bright and fair
To let wild passion write
One wrong wish there.

Haply, when from those eyes
Far, far away I roam,
Should calmer thoughts arise
Towards you and home ;

Fancy may trace some line
Worthy those eyes to meet,
Thoughts that not burn, but shine,
Pure, calm, and sweet.

And as, o'er ocean far,
Seamen their records keep,
Led by some hidden star
Through the cold deep;
So may the words I write
Tell through what storms I stray—
You still the unseen light
Guiding my way.

THE LEGACY.

WHEN in death I shall calm recline,
 O bear my heart to my mistress dear ;
 Tell her it lived upon smiles and wine
 Of the brightest hue, while it lingered here.
 Bid her not shed one tear of sorrow,
 To sully a heart so brilliant and light ;
 But balmy drops of the red grape borrow,
 To bathe the relic from morn till night.

When the light of my song is o'er,
 Then take my harp to your ancient hall ;
 Hang it up at that friendly door,
 Where weary travellers love to call.*
 Then if some bard, who roams forsaken,
 Revive its soft note in passing along,
 Oh ! let one thought of its master waken
 Your warmest smile for the child of song.

Keep this cup, which is now o'erflowing,
 To grace your revel when I'm at rest ;
 Never, oh ! never its balm bestowing
 On lips that beauty hath seldom blest.
 But when some warm devoted lover
 To her he adores shall bathe its brim,
 Then, then my spirit around shall hover,
 And hallow each drop that foams for him.

* "In every house was one or two harps, free to all travellers, who were the more caressed, the more they excelled in music."—O'HALLORAN.

HOW OFT HAS THE BENSHEE CRIED.

How oft has the Benshee cried!
How oft has death untied
Bright links that Glory wove,
Sweet bonds entwined by Love !
Peace to each manly soul that sleepeth :
Rest to each faithful eye that weepeth :
Long may the fair and brave
Sigh o'er the hero's grave !

We're fallen upon gloomy days !*
Star after star decays,
Every bright name that shed
Light o'er the land is fled.
Dark falls the tear of him who mourneth
Lost joy, or hope that ne'er returneth :
But brightly flows the tear
Wept o'er a hero's bier.

Quenched are our beacon lights—
Thou, of the Hundred Fights !†

* I have endeavoured here, without losing that Irish character which it is my object to preserve throughout this work, to allude to the sad and ominous fatality by which England has been deprived of so many great and good men, at a moment when she most requires all the aids of talent and integrity.

† This designation, which has been applied to Lord Nelson before, is the

Thou, on whose burning tongue
Truth, peace, and freedom hung!*Both mute,—but long as valor shineth,
Or mercy's soul at war repineth,
So long shall Erin's pride
Tell how they lived and died.

title given to a celebrated Irish Hero, in a poem by O'Guive, the bard of O'Niel, which is quoted in the "Philosophical Survey of the South of Ireland," page 439. "Con, of the Hundred Fights, sleep in thy grass-grown tomb, and upbraid not our defeats with thy victories!"

* Fox, "Romanorum ultimus."

WE MAY ROAM THROUGH THIS WORLD.

WE may roam through this world, like a child at a feast,
Who but sips of a sweet, and then flies to the rest ;
And, when pleasure begins to grow dull in the east,
We may order our wings, and be off to the west ;
But if hearts that feel, and eyes that smile,
Are the dearest gifts that Heaven supplies,
We never need leave our own green isle,
For sensitive hearts, and for sun-bright eyes.
Then remember, wherever your goblet is crowned,
Through this world, whether eastward or westward you roam,
When a cup to the smile of dear woman goes round,
Oh ! remember the smile that adorns her at home.

In England, the garden of Beauty is kept
By a dragon of prudery placed within call ;
But so oft this unamiable dragon has slept,
That the garden's but carelessly watched after all.
Oh ! they want the wild sweet-briery fence
Which round the flowers of Erin dwells ;
Which warns the touch, while winning the sense,
Nor charms us least when it most repels.
Then remember, wherever your goblet is crowned,
Through this world, whether eastward or westward you roam,
When a cup to the smile of dear woman goes round,
Oh ! remember the smile that adorns her at home.

In France, when the heart of a woman sets sail
On the ocean of wedlock its fortune to try,
Love seldom goes far in a vessel so frail,
But just pilots her off, and then bids her good-bye.
While the daughters of Erin keep the boy,
Ever smiling beside his faithful oar,
Through billows of woe and beams of joy,
The same as he looked when he left the shore.
Then remember, wherever your goblet is crowned,
Through this world, whether eastward or westward you roam,
When a cup to the smile of dear woman goes round,
Oh ! remember the smile that adorns her at home.

EVELEEN'S BOWER.

OH ! weep for the hour
When to Eveleen's bower
The Lord of the Valley with false vows came ;
The moon hid her light
From the heavens that night,
And wept behind the clouds o'er the maiden's shame.

The clouds passed soon
From the chaste cold moon,
And heaven smiled again with her vestal flame ;
But none will see the day
When the clouds shall pass away,
Which that dark hour left upon Eveleen's fame.

The white snow lay
On the narrow pathway,
When the Lord of the Valley crossed over the moor ;
And many a deep print
On the white snow's tint
Showed the track of his footstep to Eveleen's door.

The next sun's ray
Soon melted away
Every trace on the path where the false Lord came ;
But there's a light above,
Which alone can remove
That stain upon the snow of fair Eveleen's fame.

LET ERIN REMEMBER THE DAYS OF OLD.

LET Erin remember the days of old,
 Ere her faithless sons betrayed her ;
 When Malachi wore the collar of gold,*
 Which he won from her proud invader ;
 When her kings, with standard of green unfurled,
 Led the Red-Branch Knights to danger ;—†
 Ere the emerald gem of the western world
 Was set in the crown of a stranger.

On Lough Neagh's bank as the fisherman strays,
 When the clear cold eve's declining,
 He sees the round towers of other days
 In the wave beneath him shining ;

* “This brought on an encounter between Malachi (the Monarch of Ireland in the tenth century) and the Danes, in which Malachi defeated two of their champions, whom he encountered successively, hand to hand, taking a collar of gold from the neck of one, and carrying off the sword of the other, as trophies of his victory.”—WARNER's History of Ireland, vol. i. book ix.

† “Military orders of knights were very early established in Ireland ; long before the birth of Christ we find an hereditary order of Chivalry in Ulster, called Curaidhe na Craiobhe ruadh, or the Knights of the Red Branch, from their chief seat in Emania, adjoining to the palace of the Ulster Kings, called Teagh na Craiobhe ruadh, or the Academy of the Red Branch ; and contiguous to which was a large hospital, founded for the sick knights and soldiers, called Bronbhearg, or the House of the Sorrowful Soldier.”—O'HALLORAN's Introduction, &c., part i. chap. v.

Thus shall memory often, in dreams sublime,
Catch a glimpse of the days that are over;
Thus, sighing, look through the waves of time
For the long-faded glories they cover.*

* It was an old tradition, in the time of Giraldus, that Lough Neagh had been originally a fountain, by whose sudden overflowing the country was inundated, and a whole region, like the Atlantis of Plato, overwhelmed. He says that the fishermen, in clear weather, used to point out to strangers the tall ecclesiastical towers under the water. Piscatores aquæ illius turres ecclesiasticæ quæ more pàtriaæ arctæ sunt et altæ, necnon et rotundæ, sub undis manifeste sereno tempore conspicunt, et extrancis transeuntibus, reique causas admirantibus, frequenter ostendunt.—Topogr. Hib., dist. ii. c. 9.

DESMOND'S SONG.*

By the Feal's wave benighted,
 No star in the skies,
To thy door by Love lighted,
 I first saw those eyes.
Some voice whispered o'er me,
 As the threshold I crossed,
There was ruin before me,
 If I loved I was lost.

Love came, and brought sorrow
 Too soon in his train ;
Yet so sweet, that to-morrow
 'Twere welcome again.
Though misery's full measure
 My portion should be,
I would drain it with pleasure,
 If poured out by thee.

* "Thomas, the heir of the Desmond family, had accidentally been so engaged in the chase, that he was benighted near Tralee, and was obliged to take shelter at the Abbey of Feal, in the house of one of his dependants, called Mac Cormac. Catharine, a beautiful daughter of his host, instantly inspired the Earl with a violent passion, which he could not subdue. He married her, and by this inferior alliance alienated his followers, whose brutal pride regarded this indulgence of his love as an unpardonable degradation of his family."—LELAND, vol. ii.

11. Amelia

You, who call it dishonor
To bow to this flame,
If you've eyes, look but on her,
And blush while you blame.
Hath the pearl less whiteness
Because of its birth ?
Hath the violet less brightness
For growing near earth ?

No—Man for his glory
To ancestry flies ;
But woman's bright story
Is told in her eyes.
While the Monarch but traces
Through mortals his line,
Beauty, born of the Graces,
Ranks next to Divine !

THE SONG OF FIONNUALA.*

SILENT, oh Moyle, be the roar of thy water,
 Break not, ye breezes, your chain of repose,
 While, murmuring mournfully, Lir's lonely daughter
 Tells to the night-star her tale of woes.
 When shall the swan, her death-note singing,
 Sleep, with wings in darkness furled ?
 When will heaven, its sweet bell ringing,
 Call my spirit from this stormy world !

Sadly, oh Moyle, to thy winter-wave weeping,
 Fate bids me languish long ages away ;
 Yet still in her darkness doth Erin lie sleeping,
 Still doth the pure light its dawning delay.
 When will that day-star, mildly springing,
 Warm our isle with peace and love ?
 When will heaven, its sweet bell ringing,
 Call my spirit to the fields above.

* To make this story intelligible in a song would require a much greater number of verses than any one is authorized to inflict upon an audience at once ; the reader must therefore be content to learn, in a note, that Fionnuala, the daughter of Lir, was by some supernatural power, transformed into a swan and condemned to wander for many hundred years over certain lakes and rivers in Ireland, till the coming of Christianity, when the first sound of the mass-bell was to be the signal of her release.—I found this fanciful fiction among some manuscript translations from the Irish, which were begun under the direction of that enlightened friend of Ireland, the late Countess of Moira.

COME, SEND ROUND THE WINE.

COME, send round the wine, and leave points of belief
To simpleton sages, and reasoning fools ;
This moment's a flower too fair and brief,
To be withered and stained by the dust of the schools.
Your glass may be purple, and mine may be blue,
But, while they are filled from the same bright bowl,
The fool, who would quarrel for difference of hue,
Deserves not the comfort they shed o'er the soul.

Shall I ask the brave soldier who fights by my side
In the cause of mankind, if our creeds agree ?
Shall I give up the friend I have valued and tried,
If he kneel not before the same altar with me ?
From the heretic girl of my soul should I fly,
To seek somewhere else a more orthodox kiss ?
No, perish the hearts, and the laws that try
Truth, valor, or love, by a standard like this !

SUBLIME WAS THE WARNING.

SUBLIME was the warning that Liberty spoke,
And grand was the moment when Spaniards awoke
 Into life and revenge from the conqueror's chain.
Oh, Liberty ! let not the spirit have rest,
Till it move, like a breeze, o'er the waves of the west—
Give the light of your look to each sorrowing spot,
Nor, oh, be the Shamrock of Erin forgot,
 While you add to your garland the Olive of Spain !

If the fame of our fathers, bequeathed with their rights,
Give to country its charm, and to home its delights,
 If deceit be a wound, and suspicion a stain,
Then, ye men of Iberia, our cause is the same.
And oh ! may his tomb want a tear and a name,
Who would ask for a nobler, a holier death,
Than to turn his last sigh into victory's breath,
 For the Shamrock of Erin and Olive of Spain !

Ye Blakes and O'Donnells, whose fathers resigned
The green hills of their youth, among strangers to find
 That repose which, at home, they had sighed for in vain,
Join, join in our hope that the flame which you light
May be felt yet in Erin, as calm, and as bright,
And forgive even Albion while blushing she draws,
Like a truant, her sword, in the long-slighted cause
 Of the Shamrock of Erin and Olive of Spain !

God prosper the cause!—oh, it cannot but thrive,
While the pulse of one patriot heart is alive,
 Its devotion to feel, and its rights to maintain.
Then, how sainted by sorrow its martyrs will die!
The finger of Glory shall point where they lie;
While, far from the footstep of coward or slave,
The young spirit of Freedom shall shelter their grave
 Beneath Shamrocks of Erin and Olives of Spain!

BELIEVE ME, IF ALL THOSE ENDEARING YOUNG CHARMS.

BELIEVE me, if all those endearing young charms,
Which I gaze on so fondly to-day,
Were to change by to-morrow, and fleet in my arms,
Like fairy-gifts fading away,
Thou wouldest still be adored, as this moment thou art,
Let thy loveliness fade as it will,
And round the dear ruin each wish of my heart
Would entwine itself verdantly still.

It is not while beauty and youth are thine own,
And thy cheeks unprofaned by a tear,
That the fervor and faith of a soul can be known,
To which time will but make thee more dear ;
No, the heart that has truly loved never forgets,
But as truly loves on to the close,
As the sun-flower turns on her god, when he sets,
The same look which she turned when he rose.

ERIN, OH ERIN.

LIKE the bright lamp that shone in Kildare's holy fane,*
 And burned through long ages of darkness and storm,
 Is the heart that sorrows have frowned on in vain,
 Whose spirit outlives them, unfading and warm.
 Erin, oh Erin, thus bright through the tears
 Of a long night of bondage thy spirit appears.

The nations have fallen, and thou still art young,
 Thy sun is but rising when others are set :
 And though slavery's cloud o'er thy morning hath hung,
 The full moon of freedom shall beam round thee yet.
 Erin, oh Erin, though long in the shade,
 Thy star will shine out when the proudest shall fade.

Unchilled by the rain, and unwaked by the wind,
 The lily lies sleeping through winter's cold hour,
 Till Spring's light touch her fetters unbind,
 And daylight and liberty bless the young flower.†
 Thus Erin, oh Erin, thy winter is past,
 And the hope that lived through it shall blossom at last.

* The inextinguishable fire of St. Bridget, at Kildare, which Giraldus mentions.
 " Apud Kildariam occurrit Ignis Sanctæ Brigidæ, quem inextinguibilem vocant; non quod extingui non possit, sed quod tam solicite moniales et sanctæ mulieres ignem, suppetente materia, fovent et nutrunt, ut a tempore virginis per tot annorum curricula semper mansit inextinctus."—Girald. Camb. de Mirabil. Hibern., dist. ii. c. 34.

† Mrs. H. Tighe, in her exquisite lines on the lily, has applied this image to a still more important object.

DRINK TO HER.

DRINK to her who long
Hath waked the poet's sigh,
The girl who gave to song
What gold could never buy.
Oh ! woman's heart was made
For minstrel's hands alone :
By other fingers played,
It yields not half the tone.
Then here's to her who long
Hath waked the poet's sigh,
The girl who gave to song
What gold could never buy.

At Beauty's door of glass
When Wealth and Wit once stood,
They asked her, " Which might pass ?"
She answered, " He who could."
With golden key Wealth thought
To pass—but 'twould not do :
While Wit a diamond brought,
Which cut his bright way through,
So here's to her who long
Hath waked the poet's sigh,
The girl who gave to song
What gold could never buy.

The love that seeks a home
Where wealth or grandeur shines,
Is like the gloomy gnome
That dwells in dark gold mines.
But oh! the poet's love
Can boast a brighter sphere ;
Its native home's above,
Though woman keeps it here.
Then drink to her who long
Hath waked the poet's sigh,
The girl who gave to song
What gold could never buy.

OH! BLAME NOT THE BARD.*

Oh! blame not the bard, if he fly to the bowers
 Where Pleasure lies, carelessly smiling at Fame;
 He was born for much more, and in happier hours
 His soul might have burned with a holier flame.
 The string that now languishes loose o'er the lyre,
 Might have bent a proud bow to the warrior's dart;†
 And the lip which now breathes but the song of desire,
 Might have poured the full tide of a patriot's heart.

But alas for his country!—her pride is gone by,
 And that spirit is broken, which never would bend;
 O'er the ruin her children in secret must sigh,
 For 'tis treason to love her, and death to defend.
 Unprized are her sons, till they've learned to betray;
 Undistinguished they live, if they shame not their sires;

* We may suppose this apology to have been uttered by one of those wandering bards, whom Spenser so severely, and perhaps truly, describes in his "State of Ireland," and whose poems, he tells us, "were sprinkled with some pretty flowers of their natural device, which have good grace and comeliness unto them, the which it is great pity to see abused to the gracing of wickedness and vice, which, with good usage, would serve to adorn and beautify virtue."

† It is conjectured by Wormius, that the name of Ireland is derived from Yr, the Runic for a bow, in the use of which weapon the Irish were once very expert. This derivation is certainly more creditable to us than the following; "So that Ireland (called the land of Ire, from the constant broils therein for 400 years) was now become the land of concord."—LLOYD's State Worthies, art. The Lord Grandison.

And the torch that would light them through dignity's way,
Must be caught from the pile where their country expires.

Then blame not the bard, if in pleasure's soft dream
He should try to forget what he never can heal :
Oh ! give but a hope—let a vista but gleam
Through the gloom of his country, and mark how he'll feel !
That instant, his heart at her shrine would lay down
Every passion it nursed, every bliss it adored,
While the myrtle, now idly entwined with his crown,
Like the wreath of Harmodius, should cover his sword.*

But though glory be gone, and though hope fade away,
Thy name, loved Erin, shall live in his songs,
Not ev'n in the hour when his heart is most gay,
Will he lose the remembrance of thee and thy wrongs.
The stranger shall hear thy lament on his plains ;
The sigh of thy harp shall be sent o'er the deep,
Till thy masters themselves, as they rivet thy chains,
Shall pause at the song of their captive, and weep !

* See the Hymn, attributed to Alcæus, Εν μυρτον κλαδι το ξιφος φορησω—“I will carry my sword, hidden in myrtles, like Harmodius and Aristogiton,” &c.

WHILE GAZING ON THE MOON'S LIGHT.

WHILE gazing on the moon's light,
 A moment from her smile I turned,
 To look at orbs, that, more bright,
 In lone and distant glory burned.
 But, too far
 Each proud star,
 For me to feel its warming flame ;
 Much more dear
 That mild sphere,
 Which near our planet smiling came ;*
 Thus, Mary, be but thou my own ;
 While brighter eyes unheeded play,
 I'll love those moonlight looks alone,
 That bless my home and guide my way.

The day had sunk in dim showers,
 But midnight now, with lustre meet,
 Illumined all the pale flowers,
 Like hope upon a mourner's cheek.

* “ Of such celestial bodies as are visible, the sun excepted, the single moon, despicable as it is in comparison to most of the others, is much more beneficial than they all put together.”—WHISTON's Theory, &c.

In the Entretiens d'Ariste, among other ingenious emblems, we find a starry sky without a moon, with these words, Non mille, quod absens.

I said (while
The moon's smile
Played o'er a stream in dimpling bliss),
"The moon looks
On many brooks,
The brook can see no moon but this;""*
And thus, I thought, our fortunes run,
For many a lover looks to thee,
While oh! I feel there is but one,
One Mary in the world for me.

* This image was suggested by the following thought, which occurs somewhere in Sir William Jones's works: "The moon looks upon many night-flowers, the night-flower sees but one moon."

ILL OMENS.

WHEN daylight was yet sleeping under the billow,
And stars in the heavens still lingering shone,
Young Kitty, all blushing, rose up from her pillow,
The last time she e'er was to press it alone.
For the youth whom she treasured her heart and her soul in,
Had promised to link the last tie before noon ;
And when once the young heart of a maiden is stolen,
The maiden herself will steal after it soon.

As she looked in the glass, which a woman ne'er misses,
Nor ever wants time for a sly glance or two,
A butterfly, fresh from the night-flower's kisses,*
Flew over the mirror and shaded her view.
Enraged with the insect for hiding her graces,
She brushed him—he fell, alas ! never to rise—
“Ah ! such,” said the girl, “is the pride of our faces,
For which the soul's innocence too often dies.”

While she stole through the garden, where heart's-ease was growing,
She culled some, and kissed off its night-fallen dew ;

* An emblem of the soul.

And a rose, further on, looked so tempting and glowing,
That, spite of her haste, she must gather it too :
But, while o'er the roses too carelessly leaning,
Her zone flew in two, and the heart's-ease was lost :
" Ah ! this means," said the girl (and she sighed at its meaning),
" That love is scarce worth the repose it will cost ! "

BEFORE THE BATTLE.

By the hope within us springing,
Herald of to-morrow's strife ;
By that sun, whose light is bringing
Chains or freedom, death or life—
Oh ! remember life can be
No charm for him who lives not free !
Like the day-star in the wave,
Sinks a hero in his grave,
'Midst the dew-fall of a nation's tears.

Happy is he o'er whose decline
The smiles of home may soothing shine,
And light him down the steep of years :—
But oh ! how blest they sink to rest,
Who close their eyes on victory's breast !

O'er his watch-fire's fading embers
Now the foeman's cheek turns white,
When his heart that field remembers,
Where we tamed his tyrant might !
Never let him bind again
A chain, like that we broke from then.

Hark ! the horn of combat calls—
Ere the golden evening falls,
May we pledge that horn in triumph round !*

Many a heart that now beats high,
In slumber cold at night shall lie,
Nor waken even at victory's sound :—
But oh ! how blest that hero's sleep,
O'er whom a wondering world shall weep !

* “The Irish Corna was not entirely devoted to martial purposes. In the heroic ages our ancestors quaffed Meadh out of them, as the Danish hunters do their beverage at this day.”—WALKER.

AFTER THE BATTLE.

NIGHT closed around the conqueror's way,
And lightnings showed the distant hill,
Where those who lost that dreadful day
Stood few and faint, but fearless still !
The soldier's hope, the patriot's zeal,
For ever dimmed, for ever crossed—
Oh ! who shall say what heroes feel,
When all but life and honor's lost ?

The last sad hour of freedom's dream,
And valor's task, moved slowly by,
While mute they watched, till morning's beam
Should rise and give them light to die.
There's yet a world where souls are free,
Where tyrants taint not nature's bliss ;
If death that world's bright opening be,
Oh ! who would live a slave in this ?

'TIS SWEET TO THINK.

'Tis sweet to think, that, where'er we rove,
We are sure to find something blissful and dear,
And that, when we're far from the lips we love,
We've but to make love to the lips we are near!*
The heart, like a tendril, accustomed to cling,
Let it grow where it will, cannot flourish alone,
But will lean to the nearest and loveliest thing
It can twine with itself, and make closely its own.
Then oh ! what pleasure, where'er we rove,
To be sure to find something, still, that is dear,
And to know, when far from the lips we love,
We've but to make love to the lips we are near.

'Twere a shame, when flowers around us rise,
To make light of the rest, if the rose isn't there :
And the world's so rich in resplendent eyes,
'Twere a pity to limit one's love to a pair,

* I believe it is Marmontel who says, “ Quand on n'a pas ce que l'on aime, il faut aimer ce que l'on a.”—There are so many matter-of-fact people, who take such jeux d'esprit as this defence of inconstancy to be the actual and genuine sentiments of him who writes them, that they compel one, in self-defence, to be as matter-of-fact as themselves, and to remind them, that Democritus was not the worse physiologist for having playfully contended that snow was black, nor Erasmus in any degree the less wise for having written an ingenuous encomium of folly.

Love's wing and the peacock's are nearly alike,
They are both of them bright, but they're changeable too,
And, wherever a new beam of beauty can strike,
It will tincture Love's plume with a different hue !
Then oh ! what pleasure, where'er we rove,
To be sure to find something, still, that is dear,
And to know, when far from the lips we love,
We've but to make love to the lips we are near.

THE IRISH PEASANT TO HIS MISTRESS.*

THROUGH grief and through danger thy smile hath cheered
 my way,
 Till hope seemed to bud from each thorn that round me lay ;
 The darker our fortune, the brighter our pure love burned,
 Till shame into glory, till fear into zeal was turned ;
 Yes, slave as I was, in thy arms my spirit felt free,
 And blessed even the sorrows that made me more dear to thee.

Thy rival was honored, while thou wert wronged and scorned,
 Thy crown was of briars, while gold her brows adorned ;
 She wooed me to temples while thou lay'st hid in caves,
 Her friends were all masters, while thine alas ! were slaves ;
 Yet cold in the earth, at thy feet, I would rather be,
 Than wed what I love not, or turn one thought from thee.

They slander thee sorely, who say thy vows are frail—
 Hadst thou been a false one, thy cheek had looked less pale !
 They say too, so long thou hast worn those lingering chains ;
 That deep in thy heart they have printed their servile stains—
 Oh ! foul is the slander—no chain could that soul subdue—
 Where shineth thy spirit, there liberty shineth too !†

* Meaning allegorically, the ancient Church of Ireland.

† “Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.”—ST. PAUL, 2 Cor. iii. 17.

ON MUSIC.

WHEN through life unblest we rove,
Losing all that made life dear,
Should some notes we used to love,
In days of boyhood, meet our ear,
Oh ! how welcome breathes the strain !
Wakening thoughts that long have slept ;
Kindling former smiles again
In faded eyes that long have wept.

Like the gale that sighs along
Beds of oriental flowers,
Is the grateful breath of song
That once was heard in happier hours ;
Filled with balm, the gale sighs on,
Though the flowers have sunk in death ;
So, when pleasure's dream is gone,
Its memory lives in Music's breath.

Music ! oh how faint, how weak,
Language fades before thy spell !
Why should Feeling ever speak,
When thou canst breathe her soul so well ?
Friendship's balmy words may feign,
Love's are ev'n more false than they ;
Oh ! 'tis only Music's strain
Can sweetly soothe, and not betray !

IT IS NOT THE TEAR AT THIS MOMENT SHED.*

It is not the tear at this moment shed,
When the cold turf has just been laid o'er him,
That can tell how beloved was the friend that's fled,
Or how deep in our hearts we deplore him.
'Tis the tear, through many a long day wept,
'Tis life's whole path o'ershaded ;
'Tis the one remembrance, fondly kept,
When all lighter griefs have faded.

Thus his memory, like some holy light,
Kept alive in our hearts, will improve them,
For worth shall look fairer, and truth more bright,
When we think how he lived but to love them.
And, as fresher flowers the sod perfume
Where buried saints are lying,
So our hearts shall borrow a sweet'ning bloom
From the image he left there in dying !

* These lines were occasioned by the loss of a very near and dear relative, who died lately at Madeira.

THE ORIGIN OF THE HARP.

'TIS believed that this Harp which I wake now for thee,
Was a Siren of old, who sang under the sea ;
And who often, at eve, through the bright waters roved,
To meet on the green shore a youth whom she loved.

But she loved him in vain, for he left her to weep,
And in tears, all the night, her gold tresses to steep,
Till Heaven looked with pity on true-love so warm,
And changed to this soft Harp the sea-maiden's form.

Still her bosom rose fair—still her cheeks smiled the same—
While her sea beauties gracefully formed the light frame :
And her hair, as, let loose, o'er her white arm it fell,
Was changed to bright chords uttering melody's spell.

Hence it came, that this soft Harp so long hath been known
To mingle love's language with sorrow's sad tone ;
Till thou didst divide them, and teach the fond lay,
To speak love when I'm near thee, and grief when away !

LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM.

Oh! the days are gone, when Beauty bright,
My heart's chain wove;
When my dream of life, from morn till night,
Was love, still love.
New hope may bloom,
And days may come
Of milder, calmer beam,
But there's nothing half so sweet in life
As love's young dream:
No, there's nothing half so sweet in life
As love's young dream.

Though the bard to purer fame may soar,
When wild youth's past;
Though he win the wise, who frowned before,
To smile at last:
He'll never meet
A joy so sweet,
In all his noon of fame,
As when first he sung to woman's ear
His soul-felt flame,
And, at every close, she blushed to hear
The one loved name.

No,—that hallowed form is ne'er forgot
Which first love traced ;
Still it lingering haunts the greenest spot
On memory's waste.
'Twas odor fled
As soon as shed ;
'Twas morning's winged dream ;
'Twas a light, that ne'er can shine again
On life's dull stream :
Oh ! 'twas light that ne'er can shine again
On life's dull stream.

THE PRINCE'S DAY.*

THOUGH dark are our sorrows, to-day we'll forget them,
And smile through our tears, like a sunbeam in showers:
There never were hearts, if our rulers would let them,
More formed to be grateful and blest than ours.
But just when the chain
Has ceased to pain,
And hope has enwreathed it round with flowers,
There comes a new link
Our spirits to sink—
Oh ! the joy that we taste, like the light of the poles,
Is a flash amid darkness, too brilliant to stay;
But, though 'twere the last little spark in our souls,
We must light it up now, on our Prince's Day.

Contempt on the minion who calls you disloyal !
Though fierce to your foe, to your friends you are true ;
And the tribute most high to a head that is royal,
Is love from a heart that loves liberty too.
While cowards, who blight
Your fame, your right,
Would shrink from the blaze of the battle array,
The standard of Green
In front would be seen—

* This song was written for a fête in honor of the Prince of Wales's birthday, given by my friend, Major Bryan, at his seat in the County of Kilkenny.

Oh ! my life on your faith ! were you summoned this minute,
You'd cast every bitter remembrance away,
And show what the arm of old Erin has in it,
When roused by her foe, on her Prince's Day.

He loves the Green Isle, and his love is recorded
In hearts which have suffered too much to forget ;
And hope shall be crowned, and attachment rewarded,
And Erin's gay jubilee shine out yet.
The gem may be broke
By many a stroke,
But nothing can cloud its native ray ;
Each fragment will cast
A light to the last—
And thus Erin, my country, though broken thou art,
There's a lustre within thee that ne'er will decay ;
A spirit which beams through each suffering part,
And now smiles at all pain on the Prince's Day.

WEEP ON, WEEP ON.

WEEP on, weep on, your hour is past;
Your dreams of pride are o'er;
The fatal chain is round you cast,
And you are men no more.
In vain the hero's heart hath bled;
The sage's tongue hath warned in vain,—
Oh, Freedom ! once thy flame hath fled,
It never lights again !

Weep on—perhaps in after days,
They'll learn to love your name ;
When many a deed may wake in praise
That long hath slept in blame.
And when they tread the ruined aisle
Where rest, at length, the lord and slave,
They'll wondering ask, how hands so vile
Could conquer hearts so brave ?

“ ‘Twas fate,” they'll say, “ a wayward fate,
Your web of discord wove ;
And, while your tyrants joined in hate,
You never joined in love.
But hearts fell off that ought to twine,
And man profaned what God had given,
Till some were heard to curse the shrine
Where others knelt to heaven.”

LESBIA HATH A BEAMING EYE.

LESBIA hath a beaming eye,
But no one knows for whom it beameth ;
Right and left its arrows fly,
But what they aim at no one dreameth.
Sweeter 'tis to gaze upon
My Nora's lid that seldom rises ;
Few its looks, but every one,
Like unexpected light, surprises.
Oh, my Nora Creina, dear,
My gentle, bashful Nora Creina,
Beauty lies
In many eyes,
But love in yours, my Nora Creina !

Lesbia wears a robe of gold,
But all so close the nymph hath laced it, .
Not a charm of beauty's mould
Presumes to stay where nature placed it.
Oh, my Nora's gown for me,
That floats as wild as mountain breezes,
Leaving every beauty free
To sink or swell as Heaven pleases.
Yes, my Nora Creina, dear,
My simple, graceful Nora Creina.

Nature's dress
Is loveliness—
The dress you wear, my Nora Creina.

Lesbia hath a wit refined,
But when its points are gleaming round us,
Who can tell if they're designed
To dazzle merely, or to wound us.
Pillowed on my Nora's heart
In safer slumber Love reposes—
Bed of peace ! whose roughest part
Is but the crumpling of the roses.
Oh, my Nora Creina, dear,
My mild, my artless Nora Creina,
Wit, though bright,
Hath no such light
As warms your eyes, my Nora Creina.

I SAW THY FORM IN YOUTHFUL PRIME.

I saw thy form in youthful prime,
Nor thought that pale decay
Would steal before the steps of Time,
And waste its bloom away, Mary !
Yet still thy features wore that light,
Which fleets not with the breath ;
And life ne'er looked more truly bright
Than in thy smile of death, Mary !

As streams that run o'er golden mines,
Yet humbly, calmly glide,
Nor seem to know the wealth that shines
Within their gentle tide, Mary !
So, veiled beneath the simplest guise,
Thy radiant genius shone,
And that which charmed all other eyes
Seemed worthless in thine own, Mary !

If souls could always dwell above,
Thou ne'er hadst left that sphere ;
Or could we keep the souls we love,
We ne'er had lost thee here, Mary !

Though many a gifted mind we meet,
Though fairest forms we see,
To live with them is far less sweet
Than to remember thee, Mary!*

* I have here made a feeble effort to imitate that exquisite inscription of Shenstone's "Heu! quanto minus est cum reliquis versari quam ti meminisse!"

BY THAT LAKE WHOSE GLOOMY SHORE.*

By that Lake, whose gloomy shore
 Skylark never warbles o'er,†
 Where the cliff hangs high and steep,
 Young Saint Kevin stole to sleep.
 "Here, at least," he calmly said,
 "Woman ne'er shall find my bed."
 Ah ! the good Saint little knew
 What that wily sex can do.

'Twas from Kathleen's eyes he flew,—
 Eyes of most unholy blue !
 She had loved him well and long,
 Wished him hers, nor thought it wrong.
 Whereso'er the Saint would fly,
 Still he heard her light foot nigh ;
 East or west, where'er he turned,
 Still her eyes before him burned.

On the bold cliff's bosom cast,
 Tranquil now he sleeps at last ;

* This ballad is founded upon one of the many stories related of St. Kevin, whose bed in the rock is to be seen at Glendalough, a most gloomy and romantic spot in the County of Wicklow.

† There are many other curious traditions concerning this Lake, which may be found in Giraldus, Colgan, &c.

Dreams of heaven, nor thinks that e'er
Woman's smile can haunt him there.
But nor earth nor heaven is free
From her power, if fond she be :
Even now, while calm he sleeps,
Kathleen o'er him leans and weeps.

Fearless she had tracked his feet
To this rocky, wild retreat ;
And, when morning met his view,
Her mild glances met it too,
Ah ! your Saints have cruel hearts !
Sternly from his bed he starts,
And, with rude, repulsive shock,
Hurls her from the beetling rock.

Glendalough ! thy gloomy wave
Soon was gentle Kathleen's grave !
Soon the Saint (yet ah ! too late)
Felt her love, and mourned her fate.
When he said, " Heaven rest her soul ! "
Round the Lake light music stole ;
And her ghost was seen to glide,
Smiling, o'er the fatal tide !

SHE IS FAR FROM THE LAND.

SHE is far from the land where her young hero sleeps,
And lovers are round her sighing;
But coldly she turns from their gaze and weeps,
For her heart is in his grave lying.

She sings the wild song of her dear native plains,
Every note which he loved awaking;—
Ah! little they think, who delight in her strains,
How the heart of the Minstrel is breaking.

He had lived for his love, for his country he died,
They were all that to life had entwined him;
Nor soon shall the tears of his country be dried,
Nor long will his love stay behind him.

Oh! make her a grave where the sunbeams rest
When they promise a glorious morrow;
They'll shine o'er her sleep, like a smile from the west,
From her own loved island of sorrow.

NAY, TELL ME NOT.

NAY, tell me not, dear, that the goblet drowns
One charm of feeling, one fond regret;
Believe me, a few of thy angry frowns
Are all I've sunk in its bright wave yet.
 Ne'er hath a beam
 Been lost in the stream
That ever was shed from thy form or soul;
 The spell of those eyes,
 The balm of thy sighs,
Still float on the surface, and hallow my bowl.
Then fancy not, dearest, that wine can steal
 One blissful dream of the heart from me;
Like founts that awaken the pilgrim's zeal,
 The bowl but brightens my love for thee.

They tell us that Love in his fairy bower
 Had two blush-roses, of birth divine;
He sprinkled the one with a rainbow's shower,
 But bathed the other with mantling wine.
 Soon did the buds
 That drank of the floods
Distilled by the rainbow decline and fade;
 While those which the tide
 Of ruby had dyed
All blushed into beauty, like thee, sweet maid!

Then fancy not, dearest, that wine can steal
One blissful dream of the heart from me ;
Like founts that awaken the pilgrim's zeal,
The bowl but brightens my love for thee.

AVENGING AND BRIGHT.

AVENGING and bright falls the swift sword of Erin*
 On him who the brave sons of Usna betrayed!—
 For every fond eye he hath wakened a tear in,—
 A drop from his heart-wounds shall weep o'er her blade.

By the red cloud that hung over Conor's dark dwelling,†
 When Ulad's‡ three champions lay sleeping in gore—

* The words of this song were suggested by the very ancient Irish story called "Deirdri, or the Lamentable Fate of the Sons of Usnach," which has been translated literally from the Gaelic by Mr. O'Flanagan (see vol. i. of Transactions of the Gaelic Society of Dublin), and upon which it appears that the "Darthula" of Macpherson is founded. The treachery of Conor, King of Ulster, in putting to death the three sons of Usna, was the cause of a desolating war against Ulster, which terminated in the destruction of Eman. "This story (says Mr. O'Flanagan) has been, from time immemorial, held in high repute as one of three tragic stories of the Irish. These are, 'The Death of the Children of Touran,' 'The Death of the Children of Lear' (both regarding Tuatha de Danans); and this, 'The death of the Children of Usnach,' which is a Milesian story." It will be recollect that, in another part of these Melodies, there is a ballad upon the story of the children of Lear or Lir; "Silent, oh Moyle!" &c.

Whatever may be thought of those sanguine claims to antiquity which Mr. O'Flanagan and others advance for the literature of Ireland, it would be a very lasting reproach upon our nationality, if the Gaelic researches of this gentleman did not meet with all the liberal encouragement they merit.

† "Oh, Nasi! view that cloud that I here see in the sky! I see over Eman-green a chilling cloud of blood-tinged red."—Deirdri's Song.

‡ Ulster.

By the billows of war, which so often, high swelling,
Have wafted these heroes to victory's shore—

We swear to revenge them!—no joy shall be tasted,
The harp shall be silent, the maiden unwed,
Our halls shall be mute, and our fields shall lie wasted,
Till vengeance is wreaked on the murderer's head!

Yes, monarch! though sweet are our home recollections,
Though sweet are the tears that from tenderness fall;
Though sweet are our friendships, our hopes, our affections,
Revenge on a tyrant is sweetest of all!

WHAT THE BEE IS TO THE FLOWERET.

HE.

WHAT the bee is to the floweret,
When he looks for honey-dew,
Through the leaves that close embower it,
That my love, I'll be to you.

SHE.

What the bank, with verdure glowing,
Is to waves that wander near,
Whispering kisses, while they're going,
That I'll be to you, my dear.

But, they say, the bee's a rover,
Who will fly when sweets are gone ;
And, when once the kiss is over,
Faithless brooks will wander on.

HE.

Nay, if flowers will lose their looks,
If sunny banks will wear away,
'Tis but right, that bees and brooks
Should sip and kiss them, while they may.

LOVE AND THE NOVICE.

“ HERE we dwell, in holiest bowers,
Where angels of light o'er our orisons bend ;
Where sighs of devotion and breathings of flowers
To heaven in mingled odor ascend.
Do not disturb our calm, oh Love !
So like is thy form to the cherubs above,
It well might deceive such hearts as ours.”

Love stood near the Novice and listened,
And Love is no novice in taking a hint ;
His laughing blue eyes soon with piety glistened
His rosy wing turned to heaven's own tint.
“ Who would have thought,” the urchin cries,
“ That Love could so well, so gravely disguise
His wandering wings, and wounding eyes ?”

Love now warms thee, waking and sleeping,
Young Novice, to him all thy orisons rise.
He tinges the heavenly fount with his weeping,
He brightens the censer's flame with his sighs.
Love is the saint enshrined in thy breast,
And angels themselves would admit such a guest,
If he came to them clothed in Piety's vest.

THIS LIFE IS ALL CHEQUERED WITH PLEASURES AND WOES.

THIS life is all chequered with pleasures and woes,
That chase one another like waves of the deep,—
Each brightly or darkly, as onward it flows,
Reflecting our eyes, as they sparkle or weep.
So closely our whims on our miseries tread,
That the laugh is awaked ere the tear can be dried ;
And, as fast as the rain-drop of Pity is shed,
The goose-plumage of Folly can turn it aside.
But pledge me the cup—if existence would eloy,
With hearts ever happy, and heads ever wise,
Be ours the light Sorrow, half-sister to Joy,
And the light brilliant Folly that flashes and dies.

When Hylas was sent with his urn to the fount,
Through fields full of light, with heart full of play,
Light rambled the boy, over meadow and mount,
And neglected his task for the flowers on the way.*
Thus many, like me, who in youth should have tasted
The fountain that runs by Philosophy's shrine,
Their time with the flowers on the margin have wasted,
And left their light urns all as empty as mine.

* “ Proposito florem prætulit officio.”

PROPERT. lib. i. eleg. 20.

But pledge me the goblet—while Idleness weaves
These flowerets together, should Wisdom but see
One bright drop or two that has fall'n on the leaves
From her fountain divine, 'tis sufficient for me.

OH! THE SHAMROCK.

THROUGH Erin's isle,
To sport awhile,
As Love and Valor wandered,
With Wit, the sprite,
Whose quiver bright
A thousand arrows squandered ;
Where'er they pass,
A triple grass*
Shoots up, with dew-drops streaming,
As softly green
As emerald seen
Through purest crystal gleaming.
Oh! the Shamrock, the green, immortal Shamrock !
Chosen leaf
Of Bard and Chief,
Old Erin's native Shamrock !

Says Valor, " See,
They spring for me,
Those leafy gems of morning ! " —

* St. Patrick is said to have made use of that species of the trefoil, to which in Ireland we give the name of Shamrock, in explaining the doctrine of the Trinity to the Pagan Irish. I do not know if there be any other reason for our adoption of this plant as a national emblem. Hope, among the Ancients, was sometimes represented as a beautiful child, standing upon tiptoes, and a trefoil or three-colored grass, in her hand.

Says Love, "No, no,
 For me they grow,
 My fragrant path adorning."
 But Wit perceives
 The triple leaves,
 And cries, "Oh! do not sever
 A type that blends
 Three godlike friends,
 Love, Valor, Wit, for ever!"

Oh! the Shamrock, the green, immortal Shamrock!
 Chosen leaf
 Of Bard and Chief,
 Old Erin's native Shamrock!

So firmly fond
 May last the bond
 They wove that morn together,
 And ne'er may fall
 One drop of gall
 On Wit's celestial feather!
 May Love, as twine
 His flowers divine,
 Of thorny falsehood weed 'em!
 May Valor ne'er
 A standard rear
 Against the cause of Freedom!
 Oh! the Shamrock, the green, immortal Shamrock!
 Chosen leaf
 Of Bard and Chief,
 Old Erin's native Shamrock!

AT THE MID HOUR OF NIGHT.

AT the mid hour of night, when stars are weeping, I fly
To the lone vale we loved, when life shone warm in thine eye ;
And I think oft, if spirits can steal from the regions of air,
To revisit past scenes of delight, thou wilt come to me there,
And tell me our love is remembered, even in the sky !

Then I sing the wild song 'twas once such pleasure to hear,
When our voices commingling breathed, like one, on the ear ;
And, as Echo far off through the vale my sad orison rolls,
I think, oh, my love ! 'tis thy voice from the Kingdom of Souls,*

Faintly answering still the notes that once were so dear.

* "There are countries," says Montaigne, "where they believe the souls of the happy live in all manner of liberty, in delightful fields; and that it is those souls, repeating the words we utter, which we call Echo."

ONE BUMPER AT PARTING.

ONE bumper at parting!—though many
Have circled the board since we met,
The fullest, the saddest of any
Remains to be crowned by us yet.
The sweetness that pleasure hath in it
Is always so slow to come forth,
That seldom, alas, till the minute
It dies, do we know half its worth.
But come,—may our life's happy measure
Be all of such moments made up;
They're born on the bosom of Pleasure,
They die midst the tears of the cup.

As onward we journey, how pleasant
To pause and inhabit awhile
Those few sunny spots, like the present,
That 'mid the dull wilderness smile!
But Time, like a pitiless master,
Cries “Onward!” and spurs the gay hours—
Ah, never doth Time travel faster,
Than when his way lies among flowers.
But come—may our life's happy measure
Be all of such moments made up;
They're born on the bosom of Pleasure,
They die 'midst the tears of the cup.

We saw how the sun looked in sinking,
The waters beneath him how bright ;
And now let our farewell of drinking
Resemble that farewell of light.
You saw how he finished, by darting
His beam o'er a deep billow's brim—
So, fill up, let's shine at our parting,
In full liquid glory, like him.
And oh ! may our life's happy measure
Of moments like this be made up ;
'Twas born on the bosom of Pleasure,
It dies 'mid the tears of the cup.

'TIS THE LAST ROSE OF SUMMER.

'Tis the last rose of summer
Left blooming alone ;
All her lovely companions
Are faded and gone ;
No flower of her kindred,
No rosebud is nigh,
To reflect back her blushes,
Or give sigh for sigh.

I'll not leave thee, thou lone one,
To pine on the stem ;
Since the lovely are sleeping,
Go, sleep thou with them.
Thus kindly I scatter
Thy leaves o'er the bed,
Where thy mates of the garden
Lie scentless and dead.

So soon may I follow,
When friendships decay,
And from Love's shining circle
The gems drop away !
When true hearts lie withered,
And fond ones are flown,
Oh ! who would inhabit
This bleak world alone ?

THE YOUNG MAY MOON.

THE young May moon is beaming, love,
The glow-worm's lamp is gleaming, love,
 How sweet to rove
 Through Morna's grove,*
When the drowsy world is dreaming, love !
Then awake !—the heavens look bright, my dear,
'Tis never too late for delight, my dear,
 And the best of all ways
 To lengthen our days
Is to steal a few hours from the night, my dear.

Now all the world is sleeping, love.
But the Sage, his star-watch keeping, love,
 And I, whose star,
 More glorious far,
Is the eye from that casement peeping, love.
Then awake !—till rise of sun, my dear,
The Sage's glass we'll shun, my dear,
 Or, in watching the flight
 Of bodies of light,
He might happen to take thee for one, my dear.

* " Steals silently to Morna's grove."

See a translation from the Irish, in Mr. Bunting's collections, by John Brown, one of my earliest college companions and friends; whose death was as singularly melancholy and unfortunate as his life had been amiable, honorable, and exemplary.

THE MINSTREL-BOY.

THE Minstrel-boy to the war is gone,
In the ranks of death you'll find him ;
His father's sword he has girded on,
And his wild harp slung behind him.—
“ Land of song !” said the warrior-bard,
“ Though all the world betrays thee,
One sword, at least, thy rights shall guard,
One faithful harp shall praise thee !”

The Minstrel fell !—but the foeman's chain
Could not bring his proud soul under ;
The harp he loved ne'er spoke again,
For he tore its cords asunder ;
And said, “ No chains shall sully thee,
Thou soul of love and bravery !
Thy songs were made for the pure and free,
They shall never sound in slavery !”

THE SONG OF O'RUARK,

PRINCE OF BREFFNI.*

THE valley lay smiling before me,
Where lately I left her behind ;
Yet I trembled, and something hung o'er me
That saddened the joy of my mind.
I looked for the lamp which, she told me,
Should shine, when her Pilgrim returned ;
But, though darkness began to infold me,
No lamp from the battlements burned.

* These stanzas are founded upon an event of most melancholy importance to Ireland ; if, as we are told by our Irish historians, it gave England the first opportunity of profiting by our divisions and subduing us. The following are the circumstances, as related by O'Halloran :—“ The King of Leinster had long conceived a violent affection for Dearbhorgil, daughter to the King of Meath ; and though she had been for some time married to O'Ruark, Prince of Breffni, yet it could not restrain his passion. They carried on a private correspondence, and she informed him that O'Ruark intended soon to go on a pilgrimage (an act of piety frequent in those days), and conjured him to embrace that opportunity of conveying her from a husband she detested to a lover she adored. Mac Murchad too punctually obeyed the summons, and had the lady conveyed to his capital of Ferns.”—The monarch Roderick espoused the cause of O'Ruark, while Mac Murchad fled to England, and obtained the assistance of Henry II.

“ Such,” adds Giraldus Cambrensis (as I find him in an old translation), “ is the variable and fickle nature of woman, by whom all mischiefs in the world (for the most part) do happen and come, as may appear by Marcus Antonius, and by the destruction of Troy.”

I flew to her chamber—'twas lonely,
As if the loved tenant lay dead ;—
Ah, would it were death, and death only !
But no, the young false one hath fled.
And there hung the lute that could soften
My very worst pains into bliss,
While the hand that had waked it so often
Now throbbed to a proud rival's kiss.

There was a time, falsest of women !
When Breffni's good sword would have sought
That man, through a million of foemen,
Who dared but to wrong thee in thought !
While now—oh degenerate daughter
Of Erin, how fallen is thy fame !
And through ages of bondage and slaughter,
Our country shall bleed for thy shame.

Already the curse is upon her,
And strangers her valleys profane ;
They come to divide—to dishonor,
And tyrants they long will remain.
But onward !—the green banner rearing,
Go, flesh every sword to the hilt ;
On our side is Virtue and Erin,
On theirs is the Saxon and Guilt.

OH! HAD WE SOME BRIGHT LITTLE ISLE
OF OUR OWN.

OH! had we some bright little isle of our own
In a blue summer ocean, far off and alone,
Where a leaf never dies in the still-blooming bowers,
And the bee banquets on through a whole year of flowers;
 Where the sun loves to pause,
 With so fond a delay,
 That the night only draws
 A thin veil o'er the day;
Where simply to feel that we breathe, that we live,
Is worth the best joy that life elsewhere can give.

There, with souls ever ardent and pure as the clime,
We should love as they loved in the first golden time;
The glow of the sunshine, the balm of the air,
Would steal to our hearts, and make all summer there.
 With affection as free
 From decline as the bowers,
 And with hope, like the bee,
 Living always on flowers,
Our life should resemble a long day of light,
And our death come on holy and calm as the night.

FAREWELL!—BUT WHENEVER YOU WELCOME
THE HOUR.

FAREWELL!—but whenever you welcome the hour
That awakens the night-song of mirth in your bower,
Then think of the friend who once welcomed it too,
And forgot his own griefs to be happy with you.
His griefs may return, not a hope may remain
Of the few that have brightened his pathway of pain,
But he ne'er will forget the short vision that threw
Its enchantment around him, while lingering with you.

And still on that evening, when pleasure fills up
To the highest top sparkle each heart and each cup,
Where'er my path lies, be it gloomy or bright,
My soul, happy frends, shall be with you that night;
Shall join in your revels, your sports, and your wiles,
And return to me beaming all o'er with your smiles—
Too blest, if it tells me that, 'mid the gay cheer,
Some kind voice had murmured, “I wish he were here!”

Let Fate do her worst, there are relics of joy,
Bright dreams of the past, which she cannot destroy;
Which come in the night-time of sorrow and care,
And bring back the features that joy used to wear.

Long, long be my heart with such memories filled!
Like the vase, in which roses have once been distilled—
You may break, you may shatter the vase, if you will,
But the scent of the roses will hang round it still.

OH! DOUBT ME NOT.

Oh! doubt me not—the season
Is o'er when Folly made me rove,
And now the vestal, Reason,
Shall watch the fire awaked by Love.
Although this heart was early blown,
And fairest hands disturbed the tree,
They only shook some blossoms down,
Its fruit has all been kept for thee.
Then doubt me not—the season
Is o'er when Folly made me rove,
And now the vestal, Reason,
Shall watch the fire awaked by Love.

And though my lute no longer
May sing of Passion's ardent spell,
Yet trust me, all the stronger
I feel the bliss I do not tell.
The bee through many a garden roves,
And hums his lay of courtship o'er,
But, when he finds the flower he loves,
He settles there, and hums no more.
Then doubt me not—the season
Is o'er when Folly kept me free,
And now the vestal, Reason,
Shall guard the flame awaked by thee.

YOU REMEMBER ELLEN.*

You remember Ellen, our hamlet's pride,
How meekly she blessed her humble lot,
When the stranger, William, had made her his bride,
And love was the light of their lowly cot.
Together they toiled through winds and rains,
Till William, at length, in sadness said,
"We must seek our fortunes on other plains;"—
Then, sighing, she left her lowly shed.

They roamed a long and a weary way,
Nor much was the maiden's heart at ease,
When now, at close of one stormy day,
They see a proud castle among the trees.
"To-night," said the youth, "we'll shelter there;
The wind blows cold, the hour is late;"
So he blew the horn with a chieftain's air,
And the Porter bowed as they passed the gate.

"Now, welcome, Lady!" exclaimed the youth,
"This castle is thine, and these dark woods all!"
She believed him crazed, but his words were truth,
For Ellen is Lady of Rosna Hall!

* This ballad was suggested by a well-known and interesting story told of a certain noble family in England.

And dearly the Lord of Rosna loves
What William the stranger wooed and wed;
And the light of bliss, in these lordly groves,
Shines pure as it did in the lowly shed.

I'D MOURN THE HOPES.

I'd mourn the hopes that leave me,
If thy smiles had left me too ;
I'd weep when friends deceive me,
If thou wert, like them, untrue.
But while I've thee before me,
With heart so warm and eyes so bright,
No clouds can linger o'er me,
That smile turns them all to light.

'Tis not in fate to harm me,
While fate leaves thy love to me ;
'Tis not in joy to charm me,
Unless joy be shared with thee.
One minute's dream about thee
Were worth a long, an endless year
Of waking bliss without thee,
My own love, my only dear !

And though the hope be gone, love,
That long sparkled o'er our way,
Oh ! we shall journey on, love,
More safely, without its ray.
Far better lights shall win me
Along the paths I've yet to roam :—

The mind that burns within me,
And pure smiles from thee at home.
Thus, when the lamp that lighted
The traveller at first goes out,
He feels awhile benighted,
And looks around in fear and doubt.
But soon, the prospect clearing,
By cloudless starlight on he treads,
And thinks no lamp so cheering
As that light which Heaven sheds.

COME O'ER THE SEA.

COME o'er the sea,
Maiden, with me,
Mine through sunshine, storm, and snows;
Seasons may roll,
But the true soul
Burns the same, where'er it goes.
Let fate frown on, so we love and part not;
'Tis life where thou art, 'tis death where thou art not.

Then, come o'er the sea,
Maiden, with me,
Come wherever the wild wind blows;
Seasons may roll,
But the true soul
Burns the same, where'er it goes.

Was not the sea
Made for the Free,
Land for courts and chains alone?
Here we are slaves,
But, on the waves,
Love and Liberty's all our own.
No eye to watch, and no tongue to wound us,
All earth forgot, and all heaven around us—

Then, come o'er the sea,
Maiden, with me,
Mine through sunshine, storm, and snows;
Seasons may roll,
But the true soul,
Burns the same, where'er it goes.

HAS SORROW THY YOUNG DAYS SHADED.

HAS sorrow thy young days shaded,
As clouds o'er the morning fleet?
Too fast have those young days faded,
That, even in sorrow, were sweet?
Does Time with his cold wing wither
Each feeling that once was dear?—
Then, child of misfortune, come hither,
I'll weep with thee, tear for tear.

Has Love to that soul so tender,
Been like our Lagenian mine,*
Where sparkles of golden splendor
All over the surface shine?
But if in pursuit we go deeper,
Allured by the gleam that shone,
Ah! false as the dream of the sleeper,
Like Love, the bright ore is gone.

Has Hope, like the bird in the story,†
That flitted from tree to tree

* Our Wicklow gold-mines, to which this verse alludes, deserve, I fear, but too well the character here given of them.

† “The bird having got its prize, settled not far off with the talisman in his mouth. The prince drew near it, hoping it would drop it; but, as he approached, the bird took wing, and settled again,” &c.—Arabian Nights, Kunnir al Zummaun, and the Princess of China.

With the talisman's glittering glory—
Has Hope been that bird to thee ?
On branch after branch alighting,
The gem did she still display,
And, when nearest and most inviting,
Then waft the fair gem away ?

If thus the young hours have fleeted,
When sorrow itself looked bright ;
If thus the fair hope hath cheated,
That led thee along so light ;
If thus the cold world now wither
Each feeling that once was dear :—
Come, child of misfortune, come hither,
I'll weep with thee tear for tear.

GORBOULD.

1863.

Some day, perchance, we may
From pleasure's dream, to know
The grief of hearts forsaken

At the foot of that throne for whose weal thou hast stood,
Go, plead for the land that first cradled thy fame—
 And, bright o'er the flood
 Of her tears and her blood,
Let the rainbow of Hope be her Wellington's name!"

THE TIME I'VE LOST IN WOOING.

THE time I've lost in wooing,
In watching and pursuing
 The light that lies
 In woman's eyes,
Has been my heart's undoing.
Though Wisdom oft has sought me,
I scorned the lore she brought me,
 My only books
 Were woman's looks,
And folly's all they've taught me.

Her smile when Beauty granted,
I hung with gaze enchanted,
 Like him the Sprite,*
 Whom maids by night
Oft meet in glen that's haunted.

* This alludes to a kind of Irish fairy, which is to be met with, they say, in the fields at dusk;—as long as you keep your eyes upon him, he is fixed, and in your power; but the moment you look away (and he is ingenious in furnishing some inducement) he vanishes. I had thought that this was the sprite which we call the Leprechaun; but a high authority upon such subjects, Lady Morgan (in a note upon her national and interesting novel, O'Donnel), has given a very different account of that goblin.

Like him, too, Beauty won me,
But while her eyes were on me,
 If once their ray
 Was turned away,
O ! winds could not outrun me.

And are those follies going ?
And is my proud heart growing
 Too cold or wise
 For brilliant eyes
Again to set it glowing ?
No—vain, alas ! th' endeavor
From bonds so sweet to sever ;—
 Poor Wisdom's chance
 Against a glance
Is now as weak as ever.

OH, WHERE'S THE SLAVE.

Oh, where's the slave so lowly,
Condemned to chains unholy,
Who, could he burst
His bonds at first,
Would pine beneath them slowly?
What soul, whose wrongs degrade it,
Would wait till time decayed it,
When thus its wing
At once may spring
To the throne of Him who made it?
Farewell, Erin,—farewell, all,
Who live to weep our fall!

Less dear the laurel growing,
Alive, untouched and blowing,
Than that whose braid
Is plucked to shade
The brows with victory glowing.
We tread the land that bore us,
Her green flag glitters o'er us,
The friends we've tried
Are by our side,
And the foe we hate before us.

Farewell, Erin,—farewell, all,
Who live to weep our fall.

COME, REST IN THIS BOSOM.

COME, rest in this bosom, my own stricken deer,
Though the herd have fled from thee, thy home is still here:
Here still is the smile that no cloud can o'ercast,
And a heart and a hand all thy own to the last.

Oh ! what was love made for, if 'tis not the same
Through joy and through torment, through glory and shame ?
I know not, I ask not, if guilt's in that heart,
I but know that I love thee, whatever thou art.

Thou hast called me thy Angel in moments of bliss,
And thy Angel I'll be, 'mid the horrors of this,—
Through the furnace, unshrinking, thy steps to pursue,
And shield thee, and save thee, or perish there too !

'TIS GONE, AND FOR EVER.

'Tis gone, and for ever, the light we saw breaking,
Like Heaven's first dawn o'er the sleep of the dead—
When Man, from the slumber of ages awaking,
Looked upward, and blessed the pure ray, ere it fled.
'Tis gone, and the gleams it has left of its burning
But deepen the long night of bondage and mourning,
That dark o'er the kingdoms of earth is returning,
And, darkest of all, hapless Erin, o'er thee.

For high was thy hope, when those glories were darting
Around thee, through all the gross clouds of the world;
When Truth, from her fetters indignantly starting,
At once, like a sun-burst, her banner unfurled.*
Oh ! never shall earth see a moment so splendid !
Then, then—had one Hymn of Deliverance blended
The tongues of all nations—how sweet had ascended
The first note of Liberty, Erin, from thee !

But, shame on those tyrants who envied the blessing !
And shame on the light race unworthy its good,
Who, at Death's reeking altar, like furies caressing
The young hope of Freedom, baptized it in blood !

* "The Sun-burst" was the fanciful name given by the ancient Irish to the royal banner.

Then vanished for ever that fair, sunny vision,
Which, spite of the slavish, the cold heart's derision,
Shall long be remembered, pure, bright, and elysian,
As first it arose, my lost Erin, on thee.

I SAW FROM THE BEACH.

I SAW from the beach, when the morning was shining,
A bark o'er the waters move gloriously on ;
I came when the sun o'er that beach was declining,
The bark was still there, but the waters were gone.

And such is the fate of our life's early promise,
So passing the spring-tide of joy we have known ;
Each wave, that we danced on at morning, ebbs from us,
And leaves us, at eve, on the bleak shore alone.

Ne'er tell me of glories serenely adorning
The close of our day, the calm eve of our night ;—
Give me back, give me back the wild freshness of Morning,
Her clouds and her tears are worth Evening's best light.

Oh, who would not welcome that moment's returning,
When passion first waked a new life through his frame,
And his soul—like the wood that grows precious in burning—
Gave out all its sweets to love's exquisite flame !

FILL THE BUMPER FAIR.

FILL the bumper fair !
Every drop we sprinkle
O'er the brow of Care
Smooths away a wrinkle.
Wit's electric flame
Ne'er so swiftly passes,
As when through the frame
It shoots from brimming glasses.
Fill the bumper fair !
Every drop we sprinkle
O'er the brow of Care
Smooths away a wrinkle.

Sages can, they say,
Grasp the lightning's pinions,
And bring down its ray
From the starred dominions :—
So we, Sages, sit
And 'mid bumpers bright'ning,
From the heaven of Wit
Draw down all its lightning.

Wouldst thou know what first
Made our souls inherit
This ennobling thirst
For wine's celestial spirit ?

It chanced upon that day,
When, as bards inform us,
Prometheus stole away
The living fires that warm us ;
The careless Youth, when up
To Glory's fount aspiring,
Took nor urn nor cup
To hide the pilfered fire in.—
But oh his joy ! when, round
The halls of heaven spying,
Among the stars he found
A bowl of Bacchus lying.

Some drops were in that bowl,
Remains of last night's pleasure,
With which the Sparks of Soul
Mixed their burning treasure,
Hence the goblet's shower
Hath such spells to win us ;
Hence its mighty power
O'er that flame within us.
Fill the bumper fair !
Every drop we sprinkle
O'er the brow of Care
Smooths away a wrinkle.

DEAR HARP OF MY COUNTRY.

DEAR Harp of my Country ! in darkness I found thee,
The cold chain of silence had hung o'er thee long,*
When proudly, my own Island Harp, I unbound thee,
And gave all thy chords to light, freedom, and song !
The warm lay of love and the light note of gladness
Have wakened thy fondest, thy liveliest thrill ;
But so oft hast thou echoed the deep sigh of sadness,
That even in thy mirth it will steal from thee still.

Dear Harp of my Country ! farewell to thy numbers,
This sweet wreath of song is the last we shall twine !
Go, sleep with the sunshine of Fame on thy slumbers,
Till touched by some hand less unworthy than mine ;

*In that rebellious but beautiful song, "When Erin first rose," there is, if I recollect right, the following line:—

"The dark chain of Silence was thrown o'er the deep."

The Chain of Silence was a sort of practical figure of rhetoric among the ancient Irish. Walker tells us of "a celebrated contention for precedence, between Finn and Gaul, near Finn's palace at Almhaim, where the attending bards, anxious, if possible, to produce a cessation of hostilities, shook the Chain of Silence, and flung themselves among the ranks." See also the Ode to Gaul, the Son of Morni, in Miss Brookes's Reliques of Irish Poetry.

If the pulse of the patriot, soldier, or lover,
Have throbbed at our lay, 'tis thy glory alone;
I was but as the wind, passing heedlessly over,
And all the wild sweetness I waked was thy own.

MY GENTLE HARP.

My gentle Harp, once more I waken
The sweetness of thy slumbering strain ;
In tears our last farewell was taken,
And now in tears we meet again.
No light of joy hath o'er thee broken,
But, like those harps, whose heavenly skill
Of slavery, dark as thine, hath spoken,
Thou hang'st upon the willows still.

And yet, since thy last chord resounded,
An hour of peace and triumph came,
And many an ardent bosom bounded
With hopes—that now are turned to shame.
Yet even then, while Peace was singing
Her halcyon song o'er land and sea,
Though joy and hope to others bringing,
She only brought new tears to thee.

Then, who can ask for notes of pleasure,
My drooping Harp, from chords like thine ?
Alas, the lark's gay morning measure
As ill would suit the swan's decline !
Or how shall I, who love, who bless thee,
Invoke thy breath for Freedom's strains,

When even the wreaths in which I dress thee
Are sadly mixed—half flowers, half chains.

But come—if yet thy frame can borrow
One breath of joy, oh, breathe for me,
And show the world, in chains and sorrow
How sweet thy music still can be;
How gaily, ev'n 'mid gloom surrounding,
Thou yet canst wake at pleasure's thrill—
Like Memnon's broken image sounding,
'Mid desolation tuneful still.*

* “Dimidio magicæ resonant ubi Memnone chordæ.”—JUVENAL.

AS SLOW OUR SHIP.

As slow our ship her foamy track
Against the wind was cleaving,
Her trembling pennant still looked back
To that dear isle 'twas leaving:—
So loath we part from all we love,
From all the links that bind us;
So turn our hearts, as on we rove,
To those we've left behind us.

When, round the bowl, of vanished years
We talk, with joyous seeming,—
With smiles that might as well be tears,
So faint, so sad their beaming;
While memory brings us back again
Each early tie that twined us,
Oh, sweet's the cup that circles then
To those we've left behind us!

And when, in other climes, we meet
Some isle, or vale enchanting,
Where all looks flowery, wild, and sweet,
And nought but love is wanting;
We think how great had been our bliss,
If Heaven had but assigned us

To live and die in scenes like this,
With some we've left behind us!

As travellers oft look back, at eve,
When eastward darkly going,
To gaze upon that light they leave
Still faint behind them glowing,—
So, when the close of pleasure's day
To gloom hath near consigned us,
We turn to catch one fading ray
Of joy that's left behind us.

IN THE MORNING OF LIFE.

IN the morning of life, when its cares are unknown,
And its pleasures in all their new lustre begin,
When we live in a bright-beaming world of our own,
And the light that surrounds us is all from within ;
Oh 'tis not, believe me, in that happy time
We can love, as in hours of less transport we may ;—
Of our smiles, of our hopes, 'tis the gay sunny prime,
But affection is truest when these fade away.

When we see the first glory of youth pass us by,
Like a leaf on the stream that will never return ;
When our cup, which had sparkled with pleasure so high,
First tastes of the other, the dark-flowing urn ;
Then, then is the time when affection holds sway
With a depth and a tenderness joy never knew ;
Love, nursed among pleasures, is faithless ;— they,
But the Love born of Sorrow, like Sorrow, is true.

In climes full of sunshine, though splendid the flowers,
Their sighs have no freshness, their odor no worth ;
'Tis the cloud and the mist of our own Isle of showers
That call the rich spirit of fragrancy forth.
So it is not 'mid splendor, prosperity, mirth,
That the depth of Love's generous spirit appears ;
To the sunshine of smiles it may first owe its birth,
But the soul of its sweetness is drawn out by tears.

WHEN COLD IN THE EARTH.

WHEN cold in the earth lies the friend thou hast loved,
Be his faults and his follies forgot by thee then;
Or, if from their slumber the veil be removed,
Weep o'er them in silence, and close it again.

And oh ! if 'tis pain to remember how far
From the pathways of light he was tempted to roam,
Be it bliss to remember that thou wert the star
That arose on his darkness, and guided him home.

From thee and thy innocent beauty first came
The revealings that taught him true love to adore,
To feel the bright presence, and turn him with shame
From the idols he blindly had knelt to before.
O'er the waves of a life, long benighted and wild,
Thou cam'st like a soft, golden calm o'er the sea ;
And if happiness purely and glowingly smiled
On his ev'ning horizon, the light was from thee.

And though, sometimes, the shades of past folly might rise,
And though falsehood again would allure him to stray,
He but turned to the glory that dwelt in those eyes,
And the folly, the falsehood, soon vanished away.
As the Priests of the Sun, when their altar grew dim,
At the day-beam alone could its lustre repair,
So, if virtue a moment grew languid in him,
He but flew to that smile, and rekindled it there.

REMEMBER THEE.

REMEMBER thee ? yes, while there's life in this heart,
It shall never forget thee, all lorn as thou art ;
More dear in thy sorrow, thy gloom, and thy showers,
Than the rest of the world in their sunniest hours.

Wert thou all that I wish thee, great, glorious, and free,
First flower of the earth, and first gem of the sea,
I might hail thee with prouder, with happier brow,
But oh ! could I love thee more deeply than now ?

No, thy chains as they rankle, thy blood as it runs,
But make thee more painfully dear to thy sons—
Whose hearts, like the young of the desert bird's nest,
Drink love in each life-drop that flows from thy breast.

WREATH THE BOWL.

WREATH the bowl
With flowers of soul,
The brightest Wit can find us ;
We'll take a flight
Towards heaven to-night,
And leave dull earth behind us.
Should Love amid
The wreaths be hid,
That Joy, th' enchanter, brings us,
No danger fear,
While wine is near,
We'll drown him if he stings us.
Then wreath the bowl
With flowers of soul,
The brightest Wit can find us ;
We'll take a flight
Towards heaven to-night,
And leave dull earth behind us.

'Twas nectar fed
Of old, 'tis said,
Their Junos, Joves, Apollos ;
And man may brew,
His nectar too,
The rich receipt as follows :

Take wine like this,
Let looks of bliss,
Around it well be blended,
Then bring Wit's beam
To warm the stream,
And there's your nectar splendid !
So, wreath the bowl
With flowers of soul,
The brightest Wit can find us ;
We'll take a flight
Towards heaven to-night,
And leave dull earth behind us.

Say, why did Time
His glass sublime
Fill up with sands unsightly,
When wine, he knew,
Runs brisker through,
And sparkles far more brightly ?
Oh, lend it us,
And, smiling thus,
The glass in two we'll sever,
Make pleasure glide
In double tide,
And fill both ends for ever !
Then wreath the bowl
With flowers of soul,
The brightest Wit can find us ;
We'll take a flight
Towards heaven to-night,
And leave dull earth behind us.

WHENE'ER I SEE THOSE SMILING EYES.

WHENE'ER I see those smiling eyes,
So full of hope, and joy, and light,
As if no cloud could ever rise,
To dim a heaven so purely bright—
I sigh to think how soon that brow
In grief may lose its every ray,
And that light heart, so joyous now,
Almost forget it once was gay.

For time will come with all its blights,
The ruined hope, the friend unkind,
And love, that leaves where'er it lights,
A chilled or burning heart behind:—
While youth, that now like snow appears,
Ere sullied by the darkening rain,
When once 'tis touched by sorrow's tears
Will never shine so bright again.

IF THOU'LT BE MINE.

If thou'l be mine, the treasures of air,
Of earth, and sea, shall lie at thy feet;
Whatever in fancy's eye looks fair,
Or in Hope's sweet music sounds most sweet,
Shall be ours—if thou wilt be mine, love!

Bright flowers shall bloom wherever we rove,
A voice divine shall talk in each stream,
The stars shall look like worlds of love,
And this earth be all one beautiful dream
In our eyes—if thou wilt be mine, love!

And thoughts whose source is hidden and high,
Like streams that come from heavenward hills,
Shall keep our hearts, like meads that lie
To be bathed by those eternal rills,
Ever green, if thou wilt be mine, love!

All this and more the Spirit of Love
Can breathe o'er them who feel his spells;
That heaven which forms his home above,
He can make on earth, wherever he dwells,
As thou'l own, if thou wilt be mine, love!

TO LADIES' EYES.

To Ladies' eyes around, boy,
We can't refuse, we can't refuse,
Though bright eyes so abound, boy,
'Tis hard to choose, 'tis hard to choose.
For thick as stars that glisten
Yon airy bowers, yon airy bowers,
The countless eyes that brighten
This earth of ours, this earth of ours.
But fill the cup—where'er, boy,
Our choice may fall, our choice may fall,
We're sure to find Love there, boy,
So drink them all ! so drink them all !

Some looks there are so holy,
They seem but given, they seem but given,
As shining beacons, solely,
To light to heaven, to light to heaven.
While some—oh ! ne'er believe them—
With tempting ray, with tempting ray,
Would lead us (God forgive them !)
The other way, the other way.
But fill the cup—where'er, boy,
Our choice may fall, our choice may fall.
We're sure to find Love there, boy,
So drink them all ! so drink them all !

In some, as in a mirror,
Love seems portrayed, Love seems portrayed,
But shun the flattering error,
'Tis but his shade, 'tis but his shade.
Himself has fixed his dwelling
In eyes we know, in eyes we know,
And lips—but this is telling—
So here they go ! so here they go !
Fill up, fill up—where'er, boy,
Our choice may fall, our choice may fall,
We're sure to find Love there, boy,
So drink them all ! so drink them all !

FORGET NOT THE FIELD.

FORGET not the field where they perished,
The truest, the last of the brave,
All gone—and the bright hope we cherished
Gone with them and quenched in their grave !

Oh ! could we from death but recover
Those hearts as they bounded before,
In the face of high heaven to fight over
That combat for freedom once more ;—

Could the chain for an instant be riven
Which tyranny flung round us then,
No ! 'tis not in Man, nor in Heaven,
To let Tyranny bind it again !

But 'tis past—and though blazoned in story
The name of our victor may be,
Accurst is the march of that glory
Which treads o'er the hearts of the free.

Far dearer the grave or the prison
Illumed by one patriot's name,
Than the trophies of all who have risen
On Liberty's ruins to fame !

THEY MAY RAIL AT THIS LIFE.

THEY may rail at this life—from the hour I began it,
I found it a life full of kindness and bliss;
And, until they can show me some happier planet,
More social and bright, I'll content me with this.
As long as the world has such lips and such eyes,
As before me this moment enraptured I see,
They may say what they will of their orbs in the skies,
But this earth is the planet for you, love, and me.

In Mercury's star, where each moment can bring them,
New sunshine and wit from the fountain on high,
Though the nymphs may have livelier poets to sing them,*
They've none, even there, more enamored than I.
And, as long as this harp can be wakened to love,
And that eye its divine inspiration shall be,
They may talk as they will of their Edens above,
But this earth is the planet for you, love, and me.

In that star of the west, by whose shadowy splendor,
At twilight so often we've roamed through the dew,
There are maidens, perhaps, who have bosoms as tender,
And look, in their twilights, as lovely as you.†

* "Tous les habitans de Mercure sont vifs."—Pluralité des Mondes.

† "La Terre pourra être pour Vénus l'étoile du berger et la mère des amours, comme Vénus l'est pour nous."—Pluralité des Mondes.

But though they were even more bright than the queen
Of that isle they inhabit in heaven's blue sea,
As I never those fair young celestials have seen,
Why—this earth is the planet for you, love, and me.

As for those chilly orbs on the verge of creation,
Where sunshine and smiles must be equally rare,
Did they want a supply of cold hearts for that station,
Heaven knows we have plenty on earth we could spare.
Oh ! think what a world we should have of it here,
If the haters of peace, of affection, and glee,
Were to fly up to Saturn's comfortless sphere,
And leave earth to such spirits as you, love, and me.

OH! FOR THE SWORDS OF FORMER TIME!

Oh ! for the swords of former time !
 Oh ! for the men who bore them !
When, armed for Right, they stood sublime,
 And tyrants crouched before them !
When free yet, ere courts began
 With honors to enslave him,
The best honors worn by Man
 Were those which Virtue gave him.
Oh for the sword, &c., &c.

Oh ! for the Kings who flourished then !
 Oh ! for the pomp that crowned them !
When hearts and hands of free-born men
 Were all the ramparts round them !
When, safe built on bosoms true,
 The throne was but the centre,
Round which Love a circle drew,
 That Treason durst not enter.
Oh ! for the Kings who flourished then !
 Oh ! for the pomp that crowned them !
When hearts and hands of free-born men
 Were all the ramparts round them !

NE'ER ASK THE HOUR.

NE'ER ask the hour—what is it to us
How Time deals out his treasures ?
The golden moments lent us thus
Are not his coin, but Pleasure's.
If counting them o'er could add to their blisses,
I'd number each glorious second ;
But moments of joy are, like Lesbia's kisses,
Too quick and sweet to be reckoned.
Then fill the cup—what is it to us
How Time his circle measures ?
The fairy hours we call up thus
Obey no wand but Pleasure's.

Young Joy ne'er thought of counting hours,
Till Care, one summer's morning,
Set up, among his smiling flowers,
A dial by way of warning.
But Joy loved better to gaze on the sun,
As long as its light was glowing,
Than to watch with old Care how the shadow stole on,
And how fast that light was going.
So fill the cup—what is it to us
How Time his circle measures ?
The fairy hours we call up thus
Obey no wand but Pleasure's.

SAIL ON, SAIL ON.

SAIL on, sail on, thou fearless bark—
Wherever blows the welcome wind,
It cannot lead to scenes more dark,
More sad than those we leave behind.
Each wave that passes seems to say,
“Though death beneath our smile may be,
Less cold we are, less false than they,
Whose smiling wrecked thy hopes and thee.”

Sail on, sail on—through endless space—
Through calm—through tempest—stop no more :
The stormiest sea's a resting-place
To him who leaves such hearts on shore.
Or—if some desert land we meet,
Where never yet false-hearted men
Profaned a world that else were sweet,—
Then rest thee, bark, but not till then.

THE PARALLEL.

YES, sad one of Sion*—if closely resembling,
 In shame and in sorrow, thy withered-up heart—
 If drinking deep, deep of the same “cup of trembling”
 Could make us thy children, our parent thou art.

Like thee doth our nation lie conquered and broken,
 And fallen from her head is the once royal crown ;
 In her streets, in her halls, Desolation hath spoken,
 And, “while it is day yet, her sun hath gone down.”†

Like thine doth her exile, 'mid dreams of returning,
 Die far from the home it were life to behold ;
 Like thine do her sons, in the day of their mourning,
 Remember the bright things that blessed them of old.

Ah, well we may call her like thee, “the Forsaken,”‡
 Her boldest are vanquished, her proudest are slaves ;
 And the harps of her minstrels, when gayest they waken,
 Have tones 'mid their mirth like the wind over graves !

* These verses were written after the perusal of a treatise by Mr. Hamilton, professing to prove that the Irish were originally Jews.

† “Her sun is gone down while it was yet day.”—JER. xv. 9.

‡ “Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken.”—ISAIAH lxii. 4.

Yet hadst thou thy vengeance—yet came there the morrow
That shines out, at last, on the longest dark night,
When the sceptre, that smote thee with slavery and sorrow
Was shivered at once, like a reed, in thy sight.

When that cup, which for others the proud Golden City*
Had brimmed full of bitterness, drenched her own lips ;
And the world she had trampled on heard, without pity,
The howl in her halls, and the cry from her ships.

When the curse Heaven keeps for the haughty came over
Her merchants rapacious, her rulers unjust,
And, a ruin, at last, for the earth-worm to cover,†
The Lady of Kingdoms‡ lay low in the dust.

* “How hath the oppressor ceased ! the golden city ceased.”—ISAIAH xiv. 4.

† “Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the worms cover thee.”—ISAIAH xiv. 11.

‡ “Thou shalt no more be called the Lady of Kingdoms.”—ISAIAH xlvi. 5.

DRINK OF THIS CUP.

DRINK of this cup—you'll find there's a spell in
Its every drop 'gainst the ills of mortality—
Talk of the cordial that sparkled for Helen,
Her cup was a fiction, but this is reality.
Would you forget the dark world we are in,
Just taste of the bubble that gleams on the top of it;
But would you rise above earth, till akin
To Immortals themselves, you must drain every drop of it.
Send round the cup—for oh! there's a spell in
Its every drop 'gainst the ills of mortality—
Talk of the cordial that sparkled for Helen,
Her cup was a fiction, but this is reality.

Never was philter formed with such power
To charm and bewilder as this we are quaffing;
Its magic began when, in Autumn's rich hour,
A harvest of gold in the fields it stood laughing.
There having, by Nature's enchantment, been filled
With the balm and the bloom of her kindest weather,
This wonderful juice from its core was distilled
To enliven such hearts as are here brought together.
Then drink of the cup—you'll find there's a spell in
Its every drop 'gainst the ills of mortality—
Talk of the cordial that sparkled for Helen,
Her cup was a fiction, but this is reality.

And though, perhaps—but breathe it to no one—
Like liquor the witch brews at midnight so awful,
This philter in secret was first taught to flow on,
Yet 'tis not less potent for being unlawful.
And even though it taste of the smoke of that flame
Which in silence extracted its virtue forbidden—
Fill up—there's a fire in some hearts I could name,
Which may work too its charm, though as lawless and hidden.
So drink of the cup—for oh ! there's a spell in
Its every drop 'gainst the ills of mortality—
Talk of the cordial that sparkled for Helen,
Her cup was a fiction, but this is reality.

THE FORTUNE-TELLER.

Down in the valley come meet me to-night,
And I'll tell you your fortune truly
As ever 'twas told, by the new moon's light,
To a young maiden, shining as newly.

But, for the world, let no one be nigh,
Lest haply the stars should deceive me ;
Such secrets between you and me and the sky
Should never go farther, believe me.

If at that hour the heavens be not dim,
My science shall call up before you
A male apparition—the image of him
Whose destiny 'tis to adore you.

And if to that phantom you'll be kind,
So fondly around you he'll hover,
You'll hardly, my dear, any difference find
'Twixt him and a true living lover.

Down at your feet, in the pale moonlight,
He'll kneel with a warmth of devotion—
An ardor of which such an innocent sprite
You'd scarcely believe had a notion.

What other thoughts and events may arise,
As in destiny's book I've not seen them,
Must only be left to the stars and your eyes
To settle, ere morning between them.

OH, YE DEAD!

OH, ye Dead ! oh, ye Dead ! whom we know by the light you give

From your cold gleaming eyes, though you move like men who live,

Why leave you thus your graves,
In far off fields and waves,

Where the worm and the sea-bird only know your bed ;
To haunt this spot, where all

Those eyes that wept your fall,

And the hearts that wailed you, like your own, lie dead ?

It is true, it is true, we are shadows cold and wan ;

And the fair and the brave whom we loved on earth are gone ;
But still thus, even in death,

So sweet the living breath

Of the fields and the flowers in our youth we wandered o'er,

That ere, condemned we go

To freeze 'mid Hecla's* snow,

We would taste it awhile, and think we live once more !

* Paul Zealand mentions that there is a mountain in some part of Ireland, where the ghosts of persons who have died in foreign lands walk about and converse with those they meet, like living people. If asked why they do not return to their homes, they say they are obliged to go to Mount Hecla, and disappear immediately.

O'DONOHUE'S MISTRESS.

OF all the fair months that round the sun
In light-linked dance their circles run,
 Sweet May, shine thou for me ;
For still, when thy earliest beams arise,
That youth, who beneath the blue lake lies,
 Sweet May, returns to me.

Of all the bright haunts where daylight leaves
Its lingering smile on golden eves,
 Fair Lake, thou'rt dearest to me ;
For, when the last April sun grows dim,
Thy Naiads prepare his steed* for him
 Who dwells, bright Lake, in thee.

* The particulars of the tradition respecting O'Donohue and his White Horse, may be found in Mr. Weld's Account of Killarney, or more fully detailed in Derrick's Letters. For many years after his death, the spirit of this hero is supposed to have been seen on the morning of May-day, gliding over the lake on his favorite white horse, to the sound of sweet, unearthly music, and preceded by groups of youths and maidens, who flung wreaths of delicate spring flowers in his path.

Among other stories connected with this Legend of the Lakes it is said that
• there was a young and beautiful girl, whose imagination was so impressed with the idea of this visionary chieftain, that she fancied herself in love with him, and at last, in a fit of insanity, on a May morning, threw herself into the lake.

Of all the proud steeds that ever bore
Young plumed chiefs on sea or shore,
 White Steed, most joy to thee ;
Who still, with the first young glance of spring,
From under that glorious lake dost bring
 My love, my Chief, to me.

White, white as the sail some bark unfurls,
When newly launched, thy long mane* curls,
 Fair Steed, as white and free ;
And spirits, from all the lake's deep bowers,
Glide o'er the blue wave, scattering flowers
 Around my love and thee.

Of all the sweet deaths that maidens die,
Whose lovers beneath the cold waves lie,
 Most sweet that death will be,
Which, under the next May evening's light,
When thou and thy steed are lost to sight,
 Dear love, I'll die for thee.

* The boatmen at Killarney call those waves which come on a windy day, crested with foam, "O'Donohue's White Horses."

ECHO.

How sweet the answer Echo makes
To Music at night,
When, roused by lute or horn, she wakes,
And far away, o'er lawns and lakes,
Goes answering light !

Yet Love hath echoes truer far,
And far more sweet,
Than e'er beneath the moonlight's star,
Of horn, or lute, or soft guitar,
The songs repeat.

'Tis when the sigh, in youth sincere,
And only then,—
The sigh that's breathed for one to hear,
Is by that one, that only dear,
Breathed back again.

OH, BANQUET NOT.

OH, banquet not in those shining bowers
Where Youth resorts—but come to me ;
For mine's a garden of faded flowers,
More fit for sorrow, for age, and thee.
And there we shall have our feast of tears,
And many a cup in silence pour ;
Our guests, the shades of former years,
Our toasts, to lips that bloom no more.

There, while the myrtle's withering boughs
Their lifeless leaves around us shed,
We'll brim the bowl to broken vows,
To friends long lost, the changed, the dead.
Or, while some blighted laurel waves
Its branches o'er the dreary spot,
We'll drink to those neglected graves,
Where valor sleeps, unnamed, forgot.

THEE, THEE, ONLY THEE.

THE dawning of morn, the daylight's sinking,
The night's long hours still find me thinking
 Of thee, thee, only thee.

When friends are met, and goblets crowned,
 And smiles are near that once enchanted,
Unreached by all that sunshine round,
My soul, like some dark spot, is haunted
 By thee, thee, only thee.

Whatever in fame's high path could waken
My spirit once is now forsaken
 For thee, thee, only thee.

Like shores by which some headlong bark
 To the ocean hurries, resting never,
Life's scenes go by me, bright or dark
I know not, heed not, hastening ever
 To thee, thee, only thee.

I have not a joy but of thy bringing,
And pain itself seems sweet when springing
 From thee, thee, only thee.

Like spells that nought on earth can break,
Till lips that know the charm have spoken,
This heart, howe'er the world may wake
Its grief, its scorn, can but be broken
By thee, thee, only thee.

SHALL THE HARP THEN BE SILENT.

SHALL the Harp then be silent, when he who first gave
To our country a name is withdrawn from all eyes ?
Shall a Minstrel of Erin stand mute by the grave
Where the first—where the last of her Patriots lies ?

No—faint though the death-song may fall from his lips,
Though his Harp, like his soul, may with shadows be crost,
Yet, yet shall it sound, 'mid a nation's eclipse,
And proclaim to the world what a star hath been lost !*

What a union of all the affections and powers
By which life is exalted, embellished, refined,
Was embraced in that spirit—whose centre was ours,
While its mighty circumference circled mankind.

Oh, who that loves Erin, or who that can see,
Through the waste of her annals, that epoch sublime—
Like a pyramid raised in the desert—where he
And his glory stand out to the eyes of all time ;

That one lucid interval, snatched from the gloom
And the madness of ages, when filled with his soul,

* It is only the first two verses that are either fitted or intended to be sung.

A nation o'erleaped the dark bounds of her doom,
And for one sacred instant, touched Liberty's goal—

Who, that ever hath heard him—hath drank at the source
Of that wonderful eloquence, all Erin's own,
In whose high-thoughted daring, the fire, and the force,
And the yet untamed spring of her spirit are shown;

An eloquence rich, wheresoever its wave
Wandered free and triumphant, with thoughts that shone through,
As clear as the brook's "stone of lustre," that gave,
With the flash of the gem, its solidity too—

Who that ever approached him, when free from the crowd,
In a home full of love, he delighted to tread
'Mong the trees which a nation had given, and which bowed,
As if each brought a new civic crown for his head—

Is there one who had thus, through his orbit of life,
But at distance observed him—through glory, through blame,
In the calm of retreat, in the grandeur of strife,
Whether shining or clouded, still high and the same—

Oh no, not a heart that e'er knew him but mourns
Deep, deep o'er the grave where such glory is shrined—
O'er a monument Fame will preserve 'mong the urns
Of the wisest, the bravest, the best of mankind.

OH, THE SIGHT ENTRANCING.

OH, the sight entrancing,
When morning's beam is glancing
O'er files arayed
With helm and blade,
And plumes in the gay wind dancing !
When hearts are all high beating,
And the trumpet's voice repeating
That song whose breath
May lead to death,
But never to retreating.
Oh the sight entrancing,
When morning's beam is glancing
O'er files arayed
With helm and blade,
And plumes in the gay wind dancing.

Yet, 'tis not helm or feather—
For ask yon despot, whether
His plumed bands
Could bring such hands
And hearts as ours together.
Leave pomps to those who need 'em—
Give man but heart and freedom,
And proud he braves
The gaudiest slaves
That crawl where monarchs lead 'em.

The sword may pierce the beaver,
Stone walls in time may sever,
'Tis mind alone,
Worth steel and stone,
That keeps men free for ever.
Oh ! that sight entrancing,
When the morning's beam is glancing
O'er files arrayed
With helm and blade,
And in Freedom's cause advancing !

SWEET INNISFALLEN.

SWEET Innisfallen, fare thee well,
May calm and sunshine long be thine !
How fair thou art let others tell,
To feel how fair shall long be mine.

Sweet Innisfallen, long shall dwell
In memory's dream that sunny smile
Which o'er thee on that evening fell,
When first I saw thy fairy isle.

'Twas light, indeed, too blest for one
Who had to turn to paths of care—
Through crowded haunts again to run,
And leave thee bright and silent there ;

No more unto thy shores to come,
But, on the world's rude ocean tost,
Dream of thee sometimes, as a home
Of sunshine he had seen and lost.

Far better in thy weeping hours
To part from thee, as I do now,
When mist is o'er thy blooming bowers,
Like sorrow's veil on beauty's brow.

For, though unrivalled still thy grace,
Thou dost not look, as then, too blest,
But, thus in shadow, seem'st a place
Where erring man might hope to rest—

Might hope to rest, and find in thee
A gloom like Eden's on the day
He left its shade, when every tree,
Like thine, hung weeping o'er his way.

Weeping or smiling, lovely isle !
And all the lovelier for thy tears—
For, though but rare thy sunny smile,
'Tis heaven's own glance when it appears.

Like feeling hearts, whose joys are few,
But, when indeed they come, divine—
The brightest light the sun e'er threw
Is lifeless to one gleam of thine.

'TWAS ONE OF THOSE DREAMS.*

'TWAS one of those dreams that by music are brought,
Like a bright summer haze, o'er the poet's warm thought—
When, lost in the future, his soul wanders on,
And all of this life, but its sweetness, is gone.

The wild notes he heard o'er the water were those
He had taught to sing Erin's dark bondage and woes,
And the breath of the bugle now wafted them o'er
From Dinis' green isle to Glenà's wooded shore.

He listened—while, high o'er the eagle's rude nest,
The lingering sounds on their way loved to rest;
And the echoes sung back from their full mountain choir,
As if loth to let song so enchanting expire.

It seemed as if every sweet note that died here
Was again brought to light in some airier sphere,
Some heaven in those hills, where the soul of the strain
That had ceased upon earth was awaking again.

Oh! forgive if, while listening to music, whose breath
Seemed to circle his name with a charm against death,

* Written during a visit to Lord Kenmare, at Killarney.

He should feel a proud spirit within him proclaim,
"Even so shalt thou live in the echoes of Fame :

"Even so, though thy memory should now die away,
'Twill be caught up again in some happier day,
And the hearts and the voices of Erin prolong,
Through the answering future, thy name and thy song."

FAIREST! PUT ON AWHILE.

FAIREST! put on awhile
These pinions of light I bring thee,
And o'er thy own green isle
In fancy let me wing thee.
Never did Ariel's plume,
At golden sunset, hover
O'er scenes so full of bloom
As I shall waft thee over.

Fields, where the Spring delays,
And fearlessly meets the ardor
Of the warm Summer's gaze,
With only her tears to guard her.
Rocks, through myrtle boughs
In grace majestic frowning ;
Like some bold warrior's brows
That Love hath just been crowning.

Islets, so freshly fair,
That never hath bird come nigh them,
But from his course through air
He hath been won down by them.—*

* In describing the Skeligs (islands of the Barony of Forth), Dr. Keating

Types, sweet maid, of thee,
 Whose look, whose blush inviting,
 Never did Love yet see
 From heaven, without alighting.

Lakes, where the pearl lies hid,*
 And caves, where the gem is sleeping,
 Bright as the tears thy lid
 Lets fall in lonely weeping.
 Glens,† where Ocean comes,
 To 'escape the wild wind's rancor,
 And harbors, worthiest homes
 Where Freedom's fleet can anchor.

Then, if, while scenes so grand,
 So beautiful, shine before thee,
 Pride for thy own dear land
 Should haply be stealing o'er thee,
 Oh, let grief come first,
 O'er pride itself victorious—
 Thinking how man hath cursed
 What Heaven had made so glorious.

says, "There is a certain attractive virtue in the soil which draws down all the birds that attempt to fly over it, and obliges them to light upon the rock."

* "Nennius, a British writer of the ninth century, mentions the abundance of pearls in Ireland. Their princes, he says, hung them behind their ears; and this we find confirmed by a present made A. C. 1094, by Gilbert, bishop of Limerick, to Anselm, archbishop of Canterbury, of a considerable quantity of Irish pearls."—O'HALLORAN.

QUICK! WE HAVE BUT A SECOND.

QUICK! we have but a second,
 Fill round the cup, while you may :
For Time, the churl, hath beckoned,
 And we must away, away !
Grasp the pleasure that's flying,
 For oh ! not Orpheus strain
Could keep sweet hours from dying,
 Or charm them to life again.
Then, quick ! we have but a second,
 Fill round the cup, while you may ;
For Time, the churl, hath beckoned,
 And we must away, away !

See the glass, how it flushes
 Like some young Hebe's lip,
And half meets thine, and blushes
 That thou shouldst delay to sip.
Shame, oh shame unto thee,
 If ever thou see'st that day,
When a cup or a lip shall woo thee,
 And turn untouched away !
Then, quick ! we have but a second,
 Fill round, fill round while you may ;
For Time, the churl, hath beckoned,
 And we must away, away !

AND DOTII NOT A MEETING LIKE THIS.

AND doth not a meeting like this make amends
For all the long years I've been wandering away—
To see thus around me my youth's early friends,
As smiling and kind as in that happy day ?
Though haply o'er some of your brows, as o'er mine,
The snow-fall of time may be stealing—what then ?
Like Alps in the sunset, thus lighted by wine,
We'll wear the gay tinge of youth's roses again.

What softened remembrances come o'er the heart,
In gazing on those we've been lost to so long !
The sorrows, the joys, of which they once were part,
Still round them, like visions of yesterday, throng.
As letters some hand hath invisibly traced,
When held to the flame will steal out on the sight,
So many a feeling, that long seemed effaced,
The warmth of a moment like this brings to light.

And thus, as in Memory's bark, we shall glide
To visit the scenes of our boyhood anew,
Though oft we may see, looking down on the tide,
The wreck of full many a hope shining through,
Yet still, as in fancy we point to the flowers
That once made a garden of all the gay shore,

Deceived for a moment, we'll think them still ours,
And breathe the fresh air of life's morning once more.*

So brief our existence, a glimpse, at the most,
Is all we can have of the few we hold dear,
And oft even joy is unheeded and lost,
For want of some heart, that could echo it, near.
Ah, well may we hope, when this short life is gone,
To meet in some world of more permanent bliss ;
For a smile, or a grasp of the hand, hastening on,
Is all we enjoy of each other in this.†

But, come, the more rare such delights to the heart,
The more we should welcome and bless them the more,
They're ours, when we meet,—they are lost, when we part,
Like birds that bring summer and fly when 'tis o'er.
Thus circling the cup, hand in hand, ere we drink,
Let Sympathy pledge us, through pleasure, through pain,
That, fast as a feeling but touches one link,
Her magic shall send it direct through the chain.

* "Jours charmans, quand je songe à vos heureux instans,
Je pense remonter le fleuve de mes ans ;
Et mon cœur enchanté sur sarive fleurie
Respire encore l'air pur du matin de la vie."

† The same thought has been happily expressed by my friend Mr. Washington Irving, in his Bracebridge Hall, vol. i. p. 213. The pleasure which I feel in calling this gentleman my friend is much enhanced by the reflection, that he is too good an American to have admitted me so readily to such a distinction, if he had not known that my feelings towards the great and free country that gave him birth have long been such as every real lover of the liberty and happiness of the human race must entertain.

THE MOUNTAIN SPRITE.

IN yonder valley there dwelt, alone,
A youth whose moments had calmly flown,
Till spells came o'er him, and, day and night,
He was haunted and watched by a Mountain Sprite.

As once, by moonlight, he wandered o'er
The golden sands of that island shore,
A footprint sparkled before his sight—
'Twas the fairy foot of the Mountain Sprite !

Beside a fountain, one sunny day,
As bending over the stream he lay,
There peeped down o'er him two eyes of light,
And he saw in that mirror, the Mountain Sprite.

He turned—but, lo ! like a startled bird,
That spirit fled—and the youth but heard
Sweet music, such as marks the flight
Of some bird of song, from the Mountain Sprite.

One night, still haunted by that bright look,
The boy, bewildered, his pencil took,
And, guided only by memory's light,
Drew the once-seen form of the Mountain Sprite.

“Oh ! thou, who lovest the shadow,” cried
A voice, low whispering by his side,
“Now turn and see,”—here the youth’s delight
Sealed the rosy lips of the Mountain Sprite.

“Of all the Spirits of land and sea,”
Then rapt, he murmured, “there’s none like thee,
And oft, oh ! oft, may thy foot thus light
In this lonely bower, sweet Mountain Sprite !”

AS VANQUISHED ERIN.

As vanquished Erin wept beside
The Boyne's ill fated river,
She saw where Discord, in the tide,
Had dropped his loaded quiver.
“Lie hid,” she cried, “ye venom'd darts,
Where mortal eye may shun you ;
Lie hid—the stain of manly hearts
That bled for me is on you.”

But vain her wish, her weeping vain,—
As time too well hath taught her—
Each year the Fiend returns again,
And dives into that water;
And brings, triumphant, from beneath
His shafts of desolation,
And sends them, winged with worse than death,
Through all her madd'ning nation.

Alas for her who sits and mourns,
Even now, beside that river—
Unwearied still the Fiend returns,
And stored is still his quiver.

“When will this end, ye Powers of Good?”
She weeping asks for ever;
But only hears from out that flood,
The Demon answer, “Never!”

THEY KNOW NOT MY HEART.

THEY know not my heart, who believe there can be
One stain of this earth in its feelings for thee;
Who think, while I see thee in beauty's young hour,
As pure as the morning's first dew on the flower,
I could harm what I love—as the sun's wanton ray
But smiles on the dew-drop to waste it away.

No—beaming with light as those young features are,
There's a light round thy heart which is lovelier far;
It is not that cheek—'tis the soul dawning clear
Through its innocent blush makes thy beauty so dear;
As the sky we look up to, though glorious and fair,
Is looked up to the more, because heaven lies there !

I WISH I WAS BY THAT DIM LAKE.

I WISH I was by that dim Lake*
Where sinful souls their farewell take
Of this vain world, and half-way lie
In death's cold shadow, ere they die.
There, there, far from thee,
Deceitful world, my home should be ;
Where, come what might of gloom and pain,
False hope should ne'er deceive again.

The lifeless sky, the mournful sound
Of unseen waters falling round ;
The dry leaves, quivering o'er my head,
Like man, unquiet even when dead ;

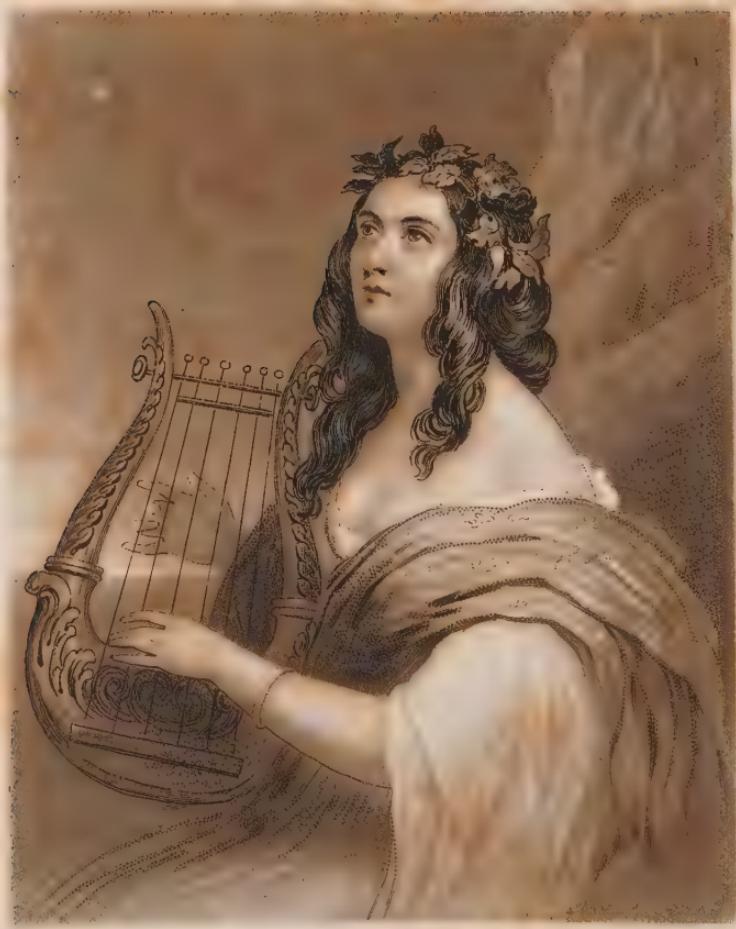

* These verses are meant to allude to that ancient haunt of superstition, called Patrick's Purgatory. "In the midst of these gloomy regions of Donegal (says Dr. Campbell) lay a lake, which was to become the mystic theatre of this fabled and intermediate state. In the lake were several islands ; but one of them was dignified with that called the Mouth of Purgatory, which, during the dark ages, attracted the notice of all Christendom, and was the resort of penitents and pilgrims from almost every country in Europe."

"It was," as the same writer tells us, "one of the most dismal and dreary spots in the North, almost inaccessible, through deep glens and rugged mountains, frightful with impending rocks, and the hollow murmurs of the western winds in dark caverns, peopled only with such fantastic beings as the mind, however gay, is, from strange association, wont to appropriate to such gloomy scenes."—Strictures on the Ecclesiastical and Literary History of Ireland.

These, ay, these shall wean
My soul from life's deluding scene,
And turn each thought, o'ercharged with gloom,
Like willows, downward towards the tomb.

As they, who to their couch at night
Would win repose, first quench the light,
So must the hopes that keep this breast
Awake be quenched, ere it can rest.
Cold, cold, this heart must grow,
Unmoved by either joy or woe,
Like freezing founts, where all that's thrown
Within their current turns to stone.

SHE SUNG OF LOVE.

SHE sung of Love, while o'er her lyre
The rosy rays of evening fell,
As if to feed with their soft fire
The soul within that trembling shell.
The same rich light hung o'er her cheek,
And played around those lips that sung
And spoke as flowers would sing and speak,
If Love could lend their leaves a tongue.

But soon the west no longer burned,
Each rosy ray from heaven withdrew ;
And when to gaze again I turned,
The minstrel's form seemed fading too.
As if her light and heaven's were one,
The glory all had left that frame ;
And from her glimmering lips the tone,
As from a parting spirit came.*

* The thought here was suggested by some beautiful lines in Mr. Rogers's Poem of Human Life, beginning—

“ Now in the glimmering, dying light she grows
Less and less earthly.”

I would quote the entire passage, but that I fear to put my own humble imitation of it out of countenance.

Who ever loved, but had the thought
That he and all he loved must part?
Filled with this fear, I flew and caught
The fading image to my heart—
And cried, “Oh Love! is this thy doom?
Oh light of youth’s resplendent day!
Must ye then lose your golden bloom,
And thus, like sunshine, die away?”

SING—SING—MUSIC WAS GIVEN.

SING—sing—Music was given
To brighten the gay and kindle the loving ;
Souls here, like planets in heaven,
By harmony's laws alone are kept moving.
Beauty may boast of her eyes and her cheeks,
But Love from the lips his true archery wings ;
And she who but feathers the dart when she speaks
At once sends it home to the heart when she sings.
Then sing—sing—Music was given
To brighten the gay and kindle the loving ;
Souls here, like planets in heaven,
By harmony's laws alone are kept moving.

When Love, rocked by his mother,
Lay sleeping, as calm as slumber could make him,
“Hush, hush,” said Venus, “no other
Sweet voice but his own is worthy to wake him.”
Dreaming of music he slumbered the while,
Till faint from his lip a soft melody broke,
And Venus, enchanted, looked on with a smile,
While Love to his own sweet singing awoke.
Then sing—sing—Music was given
To brighten the gay, and kindle the loving ;
Souls here, like planets in heaven,
By harmony's laws alone are kept moving.

THOUGH HUMBLE THE BANQUET.

THOUGH humble the banquet to which I invite thee,
Thou'l find there the best a poor bard can command:
Eyes beaming with welcome shall throng round to light thee,
And Love serve the feast with his own willing hand.

And though fortune may seem to have turned from the dwelling
Of him thou regardest her favoring ray,
Thou wilt find there a gift, all her treasures excelling,
Which proudly he feels, hath ennobled his way.

'Tis that freedom of mind which no vulgar dominion
Can turn from the path a pure conscience approves;
Which, with hope in the heart, and no chain on the pinion,
Holds upwards its course to the light which it loves.

'Tis this makes the pride of his humble retreat,
And, with this, though of all other treasures bereaved,
The breeze of his garden to him is more sweet
Than the costliest incense that Pomp e'er received.

Then come,—if a board so untempting hath power
To win thee from grandeur, its best shall be thine;
And there's one, long the light of the bard's happy bower,
Who, smiling, will blend her bright welcome with mine.

SING, SWEET HARP.

SING, sweet Harp, oh sing to me
Some song of ancient days,
Whose sounds in this sad memory,
Long buried dreams shall raise ;—
Some lay that tells of vanished fame,
Whose light once round us shone :
Of noble pride now turned to shame,
And hopes forever gone.—
Sing, sad Harp, thus sing to me ;
Alike our doom is cast,
Both lost to all but memory,
We live but in the past.

How mournfully the midnight air
Among thy chords doth sigh,
As if it sought some echo there
Of voices long gone by ;
Of chieftains, now forgot, who seemed
The foremost then in fame ;
Of bards, who, once immortal deemed,
Now sleep without a name !—
In vain, sad Harp, the midnight air
Among thy chords doth sigh ;
In vain it seeks an echo there
Of voices long gone by.

Couldst thou but call those spirits round,
Who once, in bower and hall,
Sate listening to thy magic sound,
Now mute and mouldering all ;
But no ; they would but wake to weep
Their children's slavery ;
Then leave them in their dreamless sleep,—
The dead, at least, are free.
Hush, hush, sad Harp, that dreary tone,
That knell of Freedom's day,
Or, listening to its death-like moan,
Let me, too, die away.

SONG OF THE BATTLE EVE.

Time—the Ninth Century.

To-morrow, comrade, we
On the battle-plain must be,
There to conquer, or both lie low !
The morning-star is up,—
But there's wine still in the cup,
And we'll take another quaff, ere we go, boy, go ;
We'll take another quaff, ere we go.

'Tis true, in manliest eyes
A passing tear will rise,
When we think of the friends we leave lone ;
But what can wailing do ?
See, our goblet's weeping too !
With its tears we'll chase away our own, boy, our own ;
With its tears we'll chase away our own.

But daylight's stealing on ;—
The last that o'er us shone
Saw our children around us play ;
The next—ah ! where shall we
And those rosy urchins be ?
But—no matter—grasp thy sword and away, boy, away ;
No matter—grasp thy sword and away !

Let those who brook the chain
Of Saxon or of Dane
Ignobly by their firesides stay ;
One sigh to home be given,
One heartfelt prayer to heaven,
Then, for Erin and her cause, boy, hurra ! hurra ! hurra !
Then, for Erin and her cause, hurra !

THE WANDERING BARD.

WHAT life like that of the bard can be,
The wandering bard who roams as free
As the mountain lark that o'er him sings,
And, like that lark, a music brings
Within him, where'er he comes or goes,—
A fount that for ever flows!—
The world's to him like some play-ground,
Where fairies dance their moonlight round;
If dimmed the turf where late they trod,
The elves but seek some greener sod:
So, when less bright his scene of glee,
To another away flies he.

Oh, what would have been young Beauty's doom,
Without a bard to fix her bloom?
They tell us, in the moon's bright round,
Things lost in this dark world are found;
So charms, on earth long passed and gone,
In the poet's lay live on.—
Would ye have smiles that ne'er grow dim?
You've only to give them all to him,
Who, with but a touch of Fancy's wand,
Can lend them life, this life beyond,
And fix them high, in Poesy's sky,—
Young stars that never die.

Then, welcome the bard where'er he comes,
For, though he hath countless airy homes,
To which his wing excursive roves,
Yet still, from time to time, he loves
To light upon earth and find such cheer
As brightens our banquet here.
No matter how far, how fleet he flies,
You've only to light up kind young eyes,
Such signal-fires as here are given,—
And down he'll drop from Fancy's heaven,
The minute such call to love or mirth
Proclaims he's wanting on earth.

ALONE IN CROWDS TO WANDER ON.

ALONE in crowds to wander on,
And feel that all the charm is gone
Which voices dear and eyes beloved
Shed round us once, where'er we roved—
This, this the doom must be
Of all who've loved, and lived to see
The few bright things they thought would stay
Forever near them, die away.

Though fairer forms around us throng,
Their smiles to others all belong,
And want that charm which dwells alone
Round those the fond heart calls its own.
Where, where the sunny brow ?
The long-known voice—where are they now ?
Thus ask I still, nor ask in vain,
The silence answers all too plain.

Oh what is Fancy's magic worth,
If all her art cannot call forth
One bliss like those we felt of old
From lips now mute, and eyes now cold !

No, no,—her spell is vain,—
As soon could she bring back again
Those eyes themselves from out the grave,
As wake again one bliss they gave.

I'VE A SECRET TO TELL THEE.

I'VE a secret to tell thee, but hush! not here,—
 Oh ! not where the world its vigil keeps :
I'll seek, to whisper it in thine ear,
 Some shore where the Spirit of Silence sleeps ;
Where summer's wave unmurmuring dies,
 Nor fay can hear the fountain's gush ;
Where, if but a note her night-bird sighs,
 The rose saith, chidingly, “ Hush, sweet, hush ! ”

There, amid the deep silence of that hour,
 When stars can be heard in ocean dip,
Thyself shall under some rosy bower,
 Sit mute with thy finger on thy lip :
Like him, the boy,* who born among
 The flowers that on the Nile-stream blush,
Sits ever thus,—his only song
 To earth and heaven, “ Hush, all hush ! ”

* The God of Silence, thus pictured by the Egyptians.

SONG OF INNISFAIL.

THEY came from a land beyond the sea,
 And now o'er the western main
 Set sail in their good ships gallantly,
 From the sunny land of Spain.
 “Oh, where's the Isle we've seen in dreams,
 Our destined home or grave ?”*
 Thus sung they as, by the morning's beams,
 They swept the Atlantic wave.

And, lo ! where afar o'er ocean shines
 A sparkle of radiant green,
 As though in that deep lay emerald mines,
 Whose light through the wave was seen.
 “ ’Tis Innisfail†—’tis Innisfail !”
 Rings o'er the echoing sea,
 While bending to heaven, the warriors hail
 That home of the brave and free.

Then turned they unto the eastern wave,
 Where now their Day-God's eye

* “ Milesius remembered the remarkable prediction of the principal Druid, who foretold that the posterity of Gadelus should obtain the possession of a Western Island (which was Ireland), and there inhabit.”—KEATING.

† The Island of Destiny, one of the ancient names of Ireland.

A look of such sunny omen gave
As lighted up sea and sky.
Nor frown was seen through sky or sea,
Nor tear o'er leaf or sod,
When first on their Isle of Destiny
Our great forefathers trod.

THE NIGHT DANCE.

STRIKE the gay harp ! see the moon is on high,
And, as true to her beam as the tides of the ocean,
Young hearts, when they feel the soft light of her eye,
Obey the mute call, and heave into motion.
Then, sound notes—the gayest, the lightest,
That ever took wing when heaven looked brightest !
Again ! Again !
Oh ! could such heart-stirring music be heard
In that City of Statues described by romancers,
So wakening its spell, even stone would be stirred,
And statues themselves all start into dancers !

Why then delay, with such sounds in our ears,
And the flower of Beauty's own garden before us,—
While stars overhead leave the song of their spheres,
And, listening to ours, hang wondering o'er us ?
Again, that strain !—to hear it thus sounding
Might set even Death's cold pulses bounding—
Again ! Again !
Oh what delight when the youthful and gay,
Each with eye like a sunbeam and foot like a feather,
Thus dance like the Hours to the music of May,
And mingle sweet song and sunshine together !

THERE ARE SOUNDS OF MIRTH.

THERE are sounds of mirth in the night-air ringing,
And lamps from every casement shown ;
While voices blithe within are singing,
That seem to say " Come," in every tone.
Ah ! once how light, in Life's young season,
My heart had leaped at that sweet lay ;
Nor paused to ask of graybeard reason
Should I the siren call obey.

And see—the lamps still livelier glitter,
The siren lips more fondly sound ;
No, seek, ye nymphs, some victim fitter
To sink in your rosy bondage bound.
Shall a bard whom not the world in arms
Could bend to tyranny's rude control,
Thus quail at sight of woman's charms,
And yield to a smile his freeborn soul ?

Thus sung the sage, while, slyly stealing,
The nymphs their fetters around him cast,
And, their laughing eyes, the while, concealing,—
Led Freedom's Bard their slave at last.

For the Poet's heart, still prone to loving,
Was like that rock of the Druid race,*
Which the gentlest touch at once set moving,
But all earth's power couldn't cast from its base.

* The Rocking Stones of the Druids, some of which no force is able to dislodge from their stations.

OH! ARRANMORE, LOVED ARRANMORE.

Oh! Arranmore, loved Arranmore,
 How oft I dream of thee,
 And of those days when, by thy shore,
 I wandered young and free.
 Full many a path I've tried, since then,
 Through pleasure's flowery maze,
 But ne'er could find the bliss again
 I felt in those sweet days.

How blithe upon thy breezy cliffs
 At sunny morn I've stood,
 With heart as bounding as the skiffs
 That danced along thy flood;
 Or, when the western wave grew bright
 With daylight's parting wing,
 Have sought that Eden in its light
 Which dreaming poets sing;—*

That Eden, where th' immortal brave
 Dwell in a land serene,—

* "The inhabitants of Arranmore are still persuaded that, in a clear day, they can see from this coast Hy Brysoil, or the Enchanted Island, the Paradise of the Pagan Irish, and concerning which they relate a number of romantic stories."—BEAUFORT's Ancient Topography of Ireland.

Whose bowers beyond the shining wave,
At sunset, oft are seen.
Ah, dream too full of sadd'ning truth !
Those mansions o'er the main
Are like the hopes I built in youth,—
As sunny and as vain !

LAY HIS SWORD BY HIS SIDE.

LAY his sword by his side,*—it hath served him too well,
Not to rest near his pillow below;
To the last moment true, from his hand ere it fell,
Its point was still turned to a flying foe.
Fellow-laborers in life, let them slumber in death,
Side by side, as becomes the reposing brave,—
That sword which he loved still unbroke in its sheath.
And himself unsubdued in his grave.

Yet pause—for, in fancy, a still voice I hear,
As if breathed from his brave heart's remains ;—
Faint echo of that which, in Slavery's ear,
Once sounded the war-word, “Burst your chains !”
And it cries, from the grave where the hero lies deep,
“Though the day of your Chieftain for ever hath set.
Oh leave not his sword thus inglorious to sleep,—
It hath victory's life in it yet !

“Should some alien, unworthy such weapon to wield,
Dare to touch thee, my own gallant sword,
Then rest in thy sheath, like a talisman sealed,
Or return to the grave of thy chainless lord.

* It was the custom of the ancient Irish, in the manner of the Scythians, to bury the favorite swords of their heroes along with them.

But, if grasped by a hand that hath learned the proud use
Of a falchion like thee on the battle-plain,—
Then, at Liberty's summons, like lightning let loose,
Leap forth from thy dark sheath again!"

OH, COULD WE DO WITH THIS WORLD OF OURS.

OH, could we do with this world of ours
As thou dost with thy garden bowers,
Reject the weeds and keep the flowers,
 What a heaven on earth we'd make it !
So bright a dwelling should be our own,
So warranted free from sigh or frown,
That angels soon would be coming down,
 By the week or month to take it.

Like those gay flies that wing through air,
And in themselves a lustre bear,
A stock of light, still ready there,
 Whene'er they wish to use it ;
So in this world I'd make for thee,
Our hearts should all like fire-flies be,
And the flash of wit or poesy
 Break forth whenever we choose it.

While every joy that glads our sphere
Hath still some shadow hovering near,
In this new world of ours, my dear,
 Such shadows will all be omitted :—
Unless they are like that graceful one,
Which, when thou art dancing in the sun,
Still near thee, leaves a charm upon
 Each spot where it hath flitted !

THE WINE-CUP IS CIRCLING.

THE wine-cup is circling in Almhin's hall,*
 And its Chief, 'mid his heroes reclining,
 Looks up, with a sigh, to the trophied wall,
 Where his sword hangs idly shining.
 When, hark! that shout
 From the vale without,—
 “Arm ye quick, the Dane, the Dane is nigh!”
 Every Chief starts up
 From his foaming cup,
 And “To battle, to battle!” is the Finian's cry.

The minstrels have seized their harps of gold,
 And they sing such thrilling numbers,—
 'Tis like the voice of the Brave, of old,
 Breaking forth from their place of slumbers!
 Spear to buckler rang
 As the minstrels sang,

* The palace of Fin Mac-Cumhal (the Fingal of Maepherson) in Leinster. It was built on the top of a hill, which has retained from thence the name of the Hill of Allen, in the County of Kildare. The Finians, or Fenii, were the celebrated National Militia of Ireland, which this chief commanded. The introduction of the Danes in the above song is an anachronism common to most of the Finian and Ossianic legends.

And the Sun-burst* o'er them floated wide ;
While rememb'ring the yoke
Which their fathers broke,
“ On for liberty, for liberty !” the Finians cried.

Like clouds of the night the Northmen came,
O'er the valley of Almhin lowering ;
While onward moved, in the light of its fame,
That banner of Erin, towering.
With the mingling shock
Rung cliff and rock,
While, rank on rank, the invaders die :
And the shout that last
O'er the dying passed
Was “ Victory ! victory !”—the Finian's cry.

* The name given to the banner of the Irish.

THE DREAM OF THOSE DAYS.

THE dream of those days when first I sung thee is o'er,
Thy triumph hath stained the charm thy sorrows then wore,
And even of the light which Hope once shed o'er thy chains,
Alas, not a gleam to grace thy freedom remains.

Say, is it that slavery sunk so deep in thy heart,
That still the dark brand is there, though chainless thou art ;
And Freedom's sweet fruit, for which thy spirit long burned,
Now, reaching at last thy lip, to ashes hath turned ?

Up Liberty's steep by Truth and eloquence led,
With eyes on her temple fixed, how proud was thy tread !
Ah, better thou ne'er hadst lived that summit to gain,
Or died in the porch, than thus dishonor the fane.

FROM THIS HOUR THE PLEDGE IS GIVEN.

FROM this hour the pledge is given,
From this hour my soul is thine:
Come what will from earth or heaven,
Weal or woe, thy fate be mine !
When the proud and great stood by thee,
None dared thy rights to spurn ;
And, if now they're false and fly thee,
Shall I, too, basely turn ?
No :—whate'er the fires that try thee,
In the same this heart shall burn.

Though the sea, where thou embarkest,
Offers now no friendly shore,
Light may come where all looks darkest,
Hope hath life, when life seems o'er.
And of those past ages dreaming,
When glory decked thy brow,
Oft I fondly think, though seeming
So fall'n and clouded now,
Thou'l again break forth, all beaming—
None so bright, so blest as thou.

SILENCE IS IN OUR FESTAL HALLS.*

SILENCE is in our festal halls,—
Sweet Son of Song ! thy course is o'er ;
In vain on thee sad Erin calls,
Her minstrel's voice responds no more ;—
All silent as th' Eolian shell
Sleeps at the close of some bright day,
When the sweet breeze, that waked its swell
At sunny morn, hath died away.

Yet at our feasts, thy spirit long,
Awaked by music's spell, shall rise ;
For name so linked with deathless song
Partakes its charm and never dies :
And even within the holy fane,
When music wafts the soul to heaven,
One thought to him, whose earliest strain
Was echoed there, shall long be given.

But where is now the cheerful day,
The social night, when, by thy side,

* It is hardly necessary, perhaps, to inform the reader, that these lines are meant as a tribute of sincere friendship to the memory of an old and valued colleague in this work, Sir John Stevenson.

He now weaves this parting lay
His skilless voice with thine allied ;
And sung those whose every tone,
When bard and minstrel long have past,
Shall still, in sweetness all their own,
Embalmed by fame, undying last.

Yes, Erin, thine alone the fame,—
Or, if thy bard have shared the crown,
From thee the borrowed glory came,
And at thy feet is now laid down.
Enough, if Freedom still inspire
His latest song, and still there be,
As evening closes round his lyre,
One ray upon its chords from thee.

FIRST AND SECOND NUMBERS.*

THOUGH the beauties of the National Music of Ireland have been very generally felt and acknowledged, yet it has happened, through the want of appropriate English words, and of the arrangement necessary to adapt them to the voice, that many of the most excellent compositions have hitherto remained in obscurity. It is intended, therefore, to form a collection of the best Original Irish Melodies, with characteristic symphonies and accompaniments; and with words containing, as frequently as possible, allusions to the manners and history of the country. Sir John Stevenson has very kindly consented to undertake the arrangement of the airs; and the lovers of simple National Music may rest secure, that in such tasteful hands, the native charms of the original melody will not be sacrificed to the ostentation of science.

* It is, perhaps, necessary to state that the "Irish Melodies" were originally published in Numbers, to which the following advertisements, &c., were respectively prefixed.

In the Poetical part, promises of assistance have been received from several distinguished literary characters; particularly from Mr. Moore, whose lyrical talent is so peculiarly suited to such a task, and whose zeal in the undertaking will be best understood from the following extract of a letter which he has addressed to Sir John Stevenson on the subject:—

I feel very anxious that a work of this kind should be undertaken. We have too long neglected the only talent for which our English neighbors ever deigned to allow us any credit. Our National Music has never been properly collected;* and, while the composers of the Continent have enriched their operas and sonatas with melodies borrowed from Ireland,—very often without even the honesty of acknowledgement,—we have left these treasures, in a great degree, unclaimed and fugitive. Thus our airs, like too many of our countrymen, have, for want of protection at home, passed into the service of foreigners. But we are come, I hope, to a better period of both politics and music; and how much they are connected, in Ireland at least, appears too plainly in the tone of sorrow and depression which characterizes most of our early songs.

The task which you propose to me, of adapting words to these airs, is by no means easy. The poet, who would follow the various sentiments which they express, must feel and understand that rapid fluctuation of spirits, that unaccountable mixture of gloom and levity, which composes the character of my countrymen, and has deeply tinged their music. Even in their liveliest strains we find some melancholy note intrude,—

* The writer forgot, when he made this assertion, that the public are indebted to Mr. Bunting for a very valuable collection of Irish Music; and that the patriotic genius of Miss Owenson has been employed upon some of our finest airs.

some minor third or flat seventh,—which throws its shade as it passes, and makes even mirth interesting. If Burns had been an Irishman (and I would willingly give up all our claims upon Ossian for him), his heart would have been proud of such music, and his genius would have made it immortal.

Another difficulty (which is, however, purely mechanical) arises from the irregular structure of many of those airs, and the lawless kind of metre which it will in consequence be necessary to adapt to them. In these instances the poet must write, not to the eye, but to the ear; and must be content to have his verses of that description which Cicero mentions, “Quos si cantu spoliaveris nuda remanebit oratio.” That beautiful air, “The Twisting of the Rope,” which has all the romantic character of the Swiss Ranz des Vaches, is one of those wild and sentimental rakes which it will not be very easy to tie down in sober wedlock with poetry. However, notwithstanding all these difficulties, and the very little talent which I can bring to surmount them, the design appears to me so truly National, that I shall feel much pleasure in giving it all the assistance in my power.

TO THE THIRD NUMBER.

IN presenting the Third Number of this work to the public, the Publisher begs leave to offer his acknowledgment for the very liberal patronage with which it has been honored; and to express a hope that the unabated zeal of those who have hitherto so admirably conducted it, will enable him to continue it through many future Numbers with equal spirit, variety, and taste. The stock of popular melodies is far from being exhausted; and there is still in reserve an abundance of beautiful airs, which call upon Mr. Moore, in the language he so well understands, to save them from the oblivion to which they are hastening.

LETTER ON MUSIC
TO THE MARCHIONESS DOWAGER OF DONEGAL.

PREFIXED TO THE THIRD NUMBER.

WHILE the Publisher of these Melodies very properly inscribes them to the Nobility and Gentry of Ireland in general, I have much pleasure in selecting one from that number, to whom my share of the work is particularly dedicated. Though your ladyship has been so long absent from Ireland, I know that you remember it well and warmly—that you have not allowed the charm of English society, like the taste of the lotus, to produce oblivion of your country, but that even the humble tribute which I offer derives its chief claim upon your interest from the appeal which it makes to your patriotism. Indeed, absence, however fatal to some affections of the heart, rather strengthens our love for the land where we were born; and Ireland is the country, of all others, which an exile from it must remember with most enthusiasm. Those few darker and less amiable traits with which bigotry and misrule have stained her character, and which are too apt to disgust us upon a nearer intercourse, become softened at a distance, or altogether invisible; and nothing is remembered but her virtues and her misfortunes—the zeal with which she has always loved liberty, and the barbarous policy which has always withheld it from her—the ease with which her generous spirit might be conciliated, and the cruel ingenuity which has been exerted to “wring her into undutifulness.”*

It has been often remarked, and oftener felt, that our music is the truest of all comments upon our history. The tone of defiance, succeeded by the languor of despondency—a burst of turbulence dying away into softness—the sorrows of one moment lost in the levity of the next—and all that romantic mixture of mirth and sadness, which is naturally produced by the efforts of a lively temperament to shake off, or forget, the wrongs which lie upon it,—such are the features of our history and character, which we find strongly and faithfully reflected in our music; and there are even many airs, which it is difficult to listen to, without recalling some period or event to which their expression seems applicable. Sometimes, when the strain is open and spirited, yet shaded here and there by a mournful recollection, we can fancy that we behold the brave allies of Montrose,* marching to the aid of the royal cause, notwithstanding all the perfidy of Charles and his ministers, and remembering just enough of past sufferings to enhance the generosity of their present sacrifice. The plaintive inclosures of Carolan take us back to the times in which he lived, when our poor countrymen were driven to worship their God in caves, or to quit forever the land of their birth—like the bird that abandons the nest which human touch has violated; and in many a song do we hear the last farewell of the exile,† mingling sad regret for the ties he leaves at home, with sanguine expectations of the honors that await him abroad—such honors as were won on the field of Fontenoy, where the valor of Irish Catholics turned the fortune of the day, and

* There are some gratifying accounts of the gallantry of these Irish auxiliaries in "The Complete History of the Wars in Scotland under Montrose" (1660). See particularly, for the conduct of an Irishman at the battle of Aberdeen, chap. vi. p. 49; and for a tribute to the bravery of Colonel O'Kyan, chap. vii. p. 55. Clarendon owns that the Marquis of Montrose was indebted for much of his miraculous success to the small band of Irish heroes under Macdonnell.

† The associations of the Hindu music, though more obvious and defined, were far less touching and characteristic. They divided their songs according to the seasons of the year, by which (says Sir William Jones) "they were able to recall the memory of autumnal merriment, at the close of the harvest, or of separation and melancholy during the cold months," &c.—Asiatic Transactions, vol. iii., on the Musical Modes of the Hindus.—What the Abbé du Bos says of the symphonies of Lully, may be asserted, with much more probability, of our bold and impassioned airs—"elles auroient produit de ces effets, qui nous paroissent fabuleux dans le récit des anciens, si on les avoit fait entendre à des hommes d'un naturel aussi vif que les Athéniens."—Reflex. sur la Peinture, &c., tom. i. sect. 45.

extorted from George the Second that memorable exclamation, “Cursed be the laws which deprive me of such subjects!”

Though much has been said of the antiquity of our music, it is certain that our finest and most popular airs are modern; and perhaps we may look no further than the last disgraceful century for the origin of most of those wild and melancholy strains which were at once the offspring and solace of grief, and were applied to the mind, as music was formerly to the body, “decantare loca dolentia.” Mr. Pinkerton is of opinion* that none of the Scotch popular airs are as old as the middle of the sixteenth century; and though musical antiquaries refer us, for some of our melodies, to so early a period as the fifth century, I am persuaded that there are few, of a civilized description (and by this I mean to exclude all the savage Ceanans, Cries,† &c.), which can claim quite so ancient a date as Mr. Pinkerton allows to the Scotch. But music is not the only subject upon which our taste for antiquity is rather unreasonably indulged; and, however heretical it may be to dissent from these romantic speculations, I cannot help thinking that it is possible to love our country very zealously, and to feel deeply interested in her honor and happiness, without believing that Irish was the language spoken in Paradise;‡ that our ancestors were kind enough to take the trouble of polishing the Greeks,§ or that Abaris, the Hyperborean, was a native of the North of Ireland.||

By some of these archæologists it has been imagined that the Irish were early acquainted with counter-point;* and they endeavor to support this conjecture by a well-known passage in Giraldus, where he dilates, with such elaborate praise, upon the beauties of our national minstrelsy. But the terms of this eulogy are too vague, too deficient in technical accuracy, to prove that even Giraldus himself knew anything of the artifice of counter-point. There are many expressions in the Greek and Latin writers which might be cited, with much more plausibility, to prove that they understood the arrangement of music in parts;† yet I believe it is conceded in general by the learned, that, however grand and pathetic the melody of the ancients may have been, it was reserved for the ingenuity of modern science to transmit the “light of Song” through the variegating prism of Harmony.

Indeed, the irregular scale of the early Irish (in which, as in the music of Scotland, the interval of the fourth was want-

* It is also supposed, but with as little proof, that they understood the diésis, or enharmonic interval.—The Greeks seem to have formed their ears to this delicate gradation of sound; and, whatever difficulties or objections may lie in the way of its practical use, we must agree with Mersenne (Préludes de l'Harmonie, quest 7), that the theory of Music would be imperfect without it; and even in practice (as Tosi, among others, very justly remarks, Observations on Florid Song, chap. i. sect. 16), there is no good performer on the violin who does not make a sensible difference between D sharp and E flat, though, from the imperfection of the instrument, they are the same notes upon the piano-forte. The effect of modulation by enharmonic transitions is also very striking and beautiful.

† The words πυκτία and έπειροφανία, in a passage of Pluto, and some expressions of Cicero in Fragment, lib. ii. de Republ., induced the Abbé Fraguier to maintain that the ancients had a knowledge of counter-point. M. Burette, however, has answered him, I think, satisfactorily. (Examen d'un Passage de Platon, in the 3d vol. of Histoire de l'Acad.) M. Huet is of opinion (Pensées Diverses) that what Cicero says of the music of the spheres, in his Dream of Scipio, is sufficient to prove an acquaintance with harmony; but one of the strongest passages, which I recollect, in favor of the supposition, occurs in the Treatise attributed to Aristotle—Περὶ Κύκλων,—Μουσικὴ δὲ εἶδος ἡμῖν καὶ βαρύς.

ing*) must have furnished but wild and refractory subjects to the harmonist. It was only when the invention of Guido began to be known, and the powers of the harp† were enlarged by additional strings, that our melodies took the sweet character which interests us at present; and while the Scotch persevered in the old mutilation of the scale,‡ our music became gradually more amenable to the laws of harmony and counter-point.

* Another lawless peculiarity of our music is the frequency of what composers call consecutive fifths; but this is an irregularity which can hardly be avoided by persons not very conversant with the rules of composition; indeed, if I may venture to cite my own wild attempts in this way, it is a fault which I find myself continually committing, and which has sometimes appeared so pleasing to my ear, that I have surrendered it to the critic with no small reluctance. May there be not a little pedantry in adhering too rigidly to this rule? I have been told that there are instances in Haydn of an undisguised successions of fifths; and Mr. Shield, in his Introduction to Harmony, seems to intimate that Handel has been sometimes guilty of the same irregularity.

† A singular oversight occurs in an Essay upon the Irish Harp, by Mr. Beauford, which is inserted in the Appendix to Walker's Historical Memoirs: "The Irish (says he) according to Bromton, in the reign of Henry II. had two kinds of Harps, 'Hibernici tamen in duobus musici generis instrumentis, quamvis præcipitem et velociem, suavem tamen et jucundum:' the one greatly bold and quick, the other soft and pleasing."—How a man of Mr. Beauford's learning could so mistake the meaning, and mutilate the grammatical construction of this extract, is unaccountable. The following is the passage as I find it entire in Bromton; and it requires but little Latin to perceive the injustice which has been done to the words of the old Chronicler: "Et cum Scotia, hujus terræ filia, utatur lyrâ tympano et choro, ac Wallia cithara, tubis et choro, Hibernici tamen in duobus musici generis instrumentis, quamvis præcipitem et velociem, suavem tamen et jucundam, crispatis modulis et intricatis notulis, efficiunt harmoniam."—Hist. Anglic. Script., page 1075. I should not have thought this error worth remarking, but that the compiler of the Dissertation on the Harp, prefixed to Mr. Bunting's last work, has adopted it implicitly.

‡ The Scotch lay claim to some of our best airs, but there are strong traits of difference between their melodies and ours. They had formerly the same passion for robbing us of our Saints, and the learned Dempster was for this offence called "The Saint-Stealer." It was an Irishman, I suppose, who, by

In profiting, however, by the improvements of the moderns, our style still keeps its originality sacred from their refinements; and though Carolan had frequent opportunities of hearing the works of Germiniani and other masters, we but rarely find him sacrificing his native simplicity to the ambition of their ornaments, or affectation of their science. In that curious composition, indeed, called his Concerto, it is evident that he labored to imitate Corelli; and this union of manners so very dissimilar, produces the same kind of uneasy sensation which is felt at a mixture of different styles of architecture. In general, however, the artless flow of our music has preserved itself free from all tinge of foreign innovation,* and the chief corruptions of which we have to complain arise from the unskilful performance of our own itinerant musicians, from whom, too frequently, the airs are noted down, encumbered by their tasteless decorations, and responsible for all their ignorant anomalies. Though it be sometimes impossible to trace the original strain, yet, in most of them, “auri per ramos aura refulget,”† the pure gold of the melody shines through the ungraceful foliage which surrounds it—and the most delicate and difficult duty of a compiler is to endeavor, as much as possible, by retrenching these inelegant superfluities, and col-

way of reprisal, stole Dempster's beautiful wife from him at Pisa.—See this anecdote in the Pinacotheca of Erythraeus, part i. p. 25.

* Among other false refinements of the art, our music (with the exception perhaps of the air called “Mamma, Mamma,” and one or two more of the same ludicrous description), has avoided that puerile mimicry of natural noises, motions, &c., which disgraces so often the works of even Handel himself. D'Alembert ought to have had better taste than to become the patron of this imitative affectation. See Discours Préliminaire de l'Encyclopédie. The reader may find some good remarks on the subject in Avison upon Musical Expression; a work which, though under the name of Avison, was written, it is said, by Dr. Brown.

† Virgil, Æneid. lib. vi. verse 204.

lating the various methods of playing or singing each air, to restore the regularity of its form, and the chaste simplicity of its character.

I must again observe, that in doubting the antiquity of our music, my scepticism extends but to those polished specimens of the art, which it is difficult to conceive anterior to the dawn of modern improvement; and that I would by no means invalidate the claims of Ireland to as early a rank in the annals of minstrelsy, as the most zealous antiquary may be inclined to allow her. In addition, indeed, to the power which music must always have possessed over the minds of a people so ardent and susceptible, the stimulus of persecution was not wanting to quicken our taste into enthusiasm; the charms of song were ennobled with the glories of martyrdom, and the acts against minstrels, in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth, were as successful, I doubt not, in making my countrymen musicians, as the penal laws have been in keeping them Catholics.

With respect to the verses which I have written for these Melodies, as they are intended rather to be sung than read, I can answer for their sound with somewhat more confidence than for their sense. Yet it would be affectation to deny that I have given much attention to the task, and that it is not through want of zeal or industry, if I unfortunately disgrace the sweet airs of my country, by poetry altogether unworthy of their taste, their energy, and their tenderness.

Though the humble nature of my contributions to this work may exempt them from the rigors of literary criticism, it was not to be expected that those touches of political feeling, those tones of national complaint, in which the poetry sometimes sympathizes with the music, would be suffered to pass without censure or alarm. It has been accordingly said, that the tendency of this publication is mischievous,* and that I have chosen these airs but as a vehicle of dangerous politics—as fair and precious vessels (to borrow an image of St. Augustin),† from which the wine of error might be administered. To those who identify nationality with treason, and who see, in every effort for Ireland, a system of hostility towards England,—to those, too, who, nursed in the gloom of prejudice, are alarmed by the faintest gleam of liberality that threatens to disturb their darkness—like that Demophon of old, who, when the sun shone upon him, shivered‡—to such men I shall not deign to offer an apology for the warmth of any political sentiment which may occur in the course of these pages. But as there are many, among the more wise and tolerant, who, with feeling enough to mourn over the wrongs of their country, and sense enough to perceive all the danger of not redressing them, may yet think that allusions in the least degree bold or inflammatory should be avoided in a publication of this popular description—I beg of these respected persons to believe, that there is no one who deprecates more sincerely than I do any appeal to the passions of an ignorant and angry multitude; but that it is not through that gross and inflammable region of society a work of this nature could ever have been intended to circulate. It looks much higher for its audience and readers: it is found upon the piano-fortes of the rich and the educated—of those who can afford to have their national zeal a little stimulated, without exciting much dread of the excesses into which it may hurry them; and of many whose nerves may be, now and then, alarmed with advantage, as much more is to be gained by their fears, than could ever be expected from their justice.

Having thus adverted to the principal objection which has been hitherto made to the poetical part of this work, allow me to add a few words in defence of my ingenious coadjutor, Sir John Stevenson, who has been accused of having spoiled the simplicity of the airs by the chromatic richness of his symphonies, and the elaborate variety of his harmonies. We might cite the example of the admirable Haydn, who has sported through all the mazes of musical science, in his arrangement of the simplest Scottish Melodies; but it appears to me, that Sir John Stevenson has brought a national feeling to this task, which it would be in vain to expect from a foreigner, however tasteful or judicious. Through many of his own compositions we trace a vein of Irish sentiment, which points him out as peculiarly suited to catch the spirit of his country's music; and, far from agreeing with those fastidious critics who think that his symphonies have nothing kindred with the airs which they introduce, I would say that, in general, they resemble those illuminated initials of old manuscripts, which are of the same character with the writing which follows, though more highly colored and more curiously ornamented.

In those airs, which are arranged for voices, his skill has particularly distinguished itself; and, though it cannot be denied that a single melody most naturally expresses the language of feeling and passion, yet often, when a favorite strain has been dismissed, as having lost its charm of novelty for the ear, it returns, in a harmonized shape, with new claims upon our interest and attention; and to those who study the delicate artifices of composition, the construction of the inner parts of these pieces must afford, I think, considerable satisfaction. Every voice has an air to itself, a flowing succession of notes, which might be heard with pleasure, independently of the rest—so artfully has the harmonist (if I may thus express it) gavelled the melody, distributing an equal portion of its sweetness to every part.

If your Ladyship's love of Music were not known to me, I should not have hazarded so long a letter upon the subject; but as, probably, I may have presumed too far upon your partiality, the best revenge you can take is to write me just as long a letter upon Painting; and I promise to attend to your theory of the art, with a pleasure only surpassed by that which I have so often derived from your practice of it.—May the mind which such talents adorn continue calm as it is bright, and happy as it is virtuous!

Believe me, your Ladyship's
Grateful Friend and Servant,
THOMAS MOORE.

TO THE FOURTH NUMBER.

THIS Number of the Melodies ought to have appeared much earlier; and the writer of the words is ashamed to confess, that the delay of its publication must be imputed chiefly, if not entirely, to him. He finds it necessary to make this avowal, not only for the purpose of removing all blame from the publisher, but in consequence of a rumor, which has been circulated industriously in Dublin, that the Irish Government had interfered to prevent the continuance of the Work.

This would be, indeed, a revival of Henry the Eighth's enactments against Minstrels, and it is flattering to find that so much importance is attached to our compilation, even by such persons as the inventors of the report. Bishop Lowth, it is true, was of opinion that one song, like the Hymn to Harmodius, would have done more towards rousing the spirit of the Romans, than all the Philippies of Cicero. But we live in wiser and less musical times; ballads have long lost their revolutionary powers, and we question if even a "Lillibullero" would produce any very serious consequences at present. It is needless, therefore, to add, that there is no truth in the report; and we trust that whatever belief it obtained was founded rather upon the character of the Government than of the Work.

The airs of the last Number, though full of originality and beauty, were, perhaps, in general, too curiously selected to become all at once as popular as, we think, they deserve to be. The public are remarkably reserved towards new acquaintances in music, which, perhaps, is one of the reasons why many modern composers introduce none but old friends to their notice. Indeed, it is natural that persons who love music only by association, should be slow in feeling the charms of a new and strange melody; while those, who have a quick sensibility for this enchanting art, will as naturally seek and enjoy novelty, because in every variety of strain they find a fresh combination of ideas; and the sound has scarcely reached the ear, before the heart has rapidly translated it into sentiment. After all, however, it cannot be denied that the most popular of our national airs are also the most beautiful; and it has been our wish in the present Number, to select from those melodies only which have long been listened to and admired. The least known in the collection is the air of "Love's Young Dream;" but it is one of those easy, artless strangers, whose merit the heart acknowledges instantly.

TO THE FIFTH NUMBER.

IT is but fair to those who take an interest in this work, to state that it is now very near its termination, and that the Sixth Number, which shall speedily appear, will, most probably, be the last of the series. Three volumes will then have been completed, according to the original plan, and the Proprietors desire me to say that a list of Subscribers will be published with the concluding number.

It is not so much from a want of materials, and still less from any abatement of zeal or industry, that we have adopted the resolution of bringing our task to a close; but we feel so proud, for our country's sake and our own, of the interest which this purely Irish Work has excited, and so anxious lest a particle of that interest should be lost by any ill-judged protraction of its existence, that we think it wiser to take away the cup from the lip, while its flavor is yet, we trust, fresh and sweet, than to risk any longer trial of the charm, or give so much as not to leave some wish for more. In speaking thus, I allude entirely to the airs, which are, of course, the main attraction of these volumes; and though we have still many popular and delightful Melodies to produce,* yet it cannot be denied that we should soon experience some difficulty in equalling the richness and novelty of the earlier numbers, for which, as we had the choice of all before us, we naturally selected only the most rare and beautiful. The poetry, too, would be sure to sympathize with the decline of the music ; and, however feebly my words have kept pace with the excellence of the airs, they would follow their falling off, I fear, with wonderful alacrity. So that, altogether, both pride and prudence counsel us to stop, while the work is yet, we believe, flourishing and attractive, and in the imperial attitude “ stantes mori,” before we incur the charge either of altering for the worse, or what is equally unpardonable, continuing too long the same.

We beg, however, to say, it is only in the event of our failing to find airs as exquisite as most of those we have given, that we mean thus to anticipate the natural period of dissolution—like those Indians who put their relatives to death when they become feeble—and they who wish to retard this euthanasia of the Irish Melodies, cannot better effect it than by contributing to our collection, not what are called curious airs, for we have abundance of them, and they are, in general, only curious, but any real sweet and expressive songs of our country, which either chance or research may have brought into their hands.

T. M.

Mayfield Cottage, Ashbourne,
December, 1813.

* Among these is Savourna Deelish, which I have hitherto only withheld from the diffidence I feel in treading upon the same ground with Mr. Campbell, whose beautiful words to this fine Air have taken too strong possession of all ears and hearts, for me to think of producing any impression after him. I suppose, however, I must attempt it for the next Number.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE SIXTH NUMBER.

IN presenting this Sixth Number to the public as our last, and bidding adieu to the Irish Harp for ever, we shall not answer very confidently for the strength of our resolution, nor feel quite sure that it may not prove, after all, to be only one of those eternal farewells which a lover takes of his mistress occasionally. Our only motive, indeed, for discontinuing the work was a fear that our treasures were nearly exhausted, and an unwillingness to descend to the gathering of mere seed-pearl, after the very valuable gems it has been our lot to string together. The announcement, however, of this intention, in our Fifth Number, has excited a degree of anxiety in the lovers of Irish Music, not only pleasant and flattering, but highly useful to us; for the various contributions we have received in consequence have enriched our collection with so many choice and beautiful airs, that if we keep to our resolution of publishing no more, it will certainly be an instance of forbearance and self-command unexampled in the history of poets and musicians. To one gentleman, in particular, who has been many years resident in England, but who has not forgot, among his various pursuits, either the language or the melodies of his native country, we beg to offer our best thanks for the many interesting communications with which he has favored us ; and we trust that he and our other friends will not relax in those efforts by which we have been so considerably assisted ; for, though the work must now be considered as defunct, yet—as Reaumur, the naturalist, found out the art of making the cicada sing after it was dead—it is not impossible that, some time or other, we may try a similar experiment upon the Irish Melodies.

T. M.

Mayfield, Ashbourne,
March, 1815.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE SEVENTH NUMBER.

IF I had consulted only my own judgment, this work would not have extended beyond the six numbers already published ; which contain, perhaps, the flower of our national melodies, and have attained a rank in public favor, of which I would not willingly risk the forfeiture, by degenerating, in any way, from those merits that were its source. Whatever treasures of our music were still in reserve (and it will be seen, I trust, that they are numerous and valuable), I would gladly have left to future poets to glean, and with the ritual words "tibi trado," would have delivered up the torch into other hands, before it had lost much of its light in my own. But the call for a continuance of the work has been, as I understand from the Publisher, so general, and we have received so many continuations of old and beautiful airs,* the suppression of which,

* One gentleman, in particular, whose name I shall feel happy in being allowed to mention; has not only sent us nearly forty ancient airs, but has communicated many curious fragments of Irish poetry, and some interesting traditions current in the county where he resides, illustrated by sketches of the romantic scenery to which they refer ; all of which, though too late for the present Number, will be of infinite service to us in the prosecution of our task.

for the enhancement of those we have published, would resemble too much the policy of the Dutch in burning their spices, that I have been persuaded, though not without considerable diffidence in my success, to commence a new series of the Irish Melodies.

T. M.

DEDICATION

TO THE MARCHIONESS OF HEADFORT.

PREFIXED TO THE TENTH NUMBER.

IT is with a pleasure, not unmixed with melancholy, that I dedicate the last Number of the Irish Melodies to your Ladyship; nor can I have any doubt that the feelings with which you receive the tribute will be of the same mingled and saddened tone. To you, who though but little beyond the season of childhood, when the earlier numbers of this work appeared, lent the aid of your beautiful voice, and, even then, exquisite feeling for music, to the happy circle who met, to sing them together, under your father's roof, the gratification, whatever it may be, which this humble offering brings, cannot be otherwise than darkened by the mournful reflection, how many of the voices which then joined with ours are now silent in death!

I am not without hope that as far as regards the grace and spirit of the Melodies, you will find this closing portion of the work not unworthy of what has preceded it. The Sixteen Airs, of which the Number and the Supplement consist, have been selected from the immense mass of Irish music which has been for years past accumulating in my hands; and it was from a desire to include all that appeared most worthy of preservation, that the four supplementary songs which follow this Tenth Number have been added.

Trusting that I may yet again, in remembrance of old times, hear our voices together in some of the harmonized airs of this Volume, I have the honor to subscribe myself,

Your Ladyship's faithful Friend and Servant,
THOMAS MOORE.

Sloperton Cottage, May, 1834.

INDEX.

	PAGE
ALONE in crowds to wander on,	187
And doth not a meeting like this make amends,	168
As a beam o'er the face of the waters may glow,	28
As slow our ship her foamy track,	127
As vanquished Erin wept beside,	172
At the mid hour of night, when stars are weeping,	89
Avenging and bright fall the swift sword of Erin,	81
Believe me, if all those endearing young charms,	48
By that Lake, whose gloomy shore,	74
By the Feal's wave benighted,	42
By the hope within us springing,	58
Come o'er the sea,	105
Come, rest in this bosom, my own stricken deer,	117
Come, send round the wine, and leave points of belief,	45
Dear Harp of my country! in darkness I found thee,	123
Down in the valley come meet me to-night,	148
Drink of this cup—you'll find there's a spell in,	146
Drink to her who long,	50
Erin! the tear and the smile in thine eyes,	21

	PAGE
Fairest! put on awhile,	165
Farewell!—but whenever you welcome the hour,	98
Fill the bumper fair,	121
Fly not yet; 'tis just the hour,	24
Forget not the field where they perished,	138
From this hour the pledge is given,	203
Go where glory waits thee,	17
Has sorrow thy young days shaded,	107
Here we dwell, in holiest bowers,	84
How dear to me the hour when daylight dies,	31
How oft has the Benshee cried,	35
How sweet the answer Echo makes,	153
I'd mourn the hopes that leave me,	103
If thou'l be mine, the treasures of air,	135
In the morning of life, when its cares are unknown,	129
In yonder valley there dwelt, alone,	170
I saw from the beach, when the morning was shining,	120
I saw thy form in youthful prime,	74
It is not the tear at this moment shed,	65
I've a secret to tell thee, but hush! not here,	189
I wish I was by that dim lake,	175
Lay his sword by his side,	197
Lesbia hath a beaming eye,	72
Let Erin remember the days of old,	40
Like the bright lamp that shone in Kildare's holy fane,	49
My gentle harp, once more I waken,	125

	PAGE
Nay, tell me not, dear, that the goblet drowns,	79
Ne'er ask the hour—what is it to us,	143
Night closed around the conqueror's way,	60
No, not more welcome the fairy numbers,	109
Of all the fair months that round the sun,	151
Oh ! Arranmore, loved Arranmore,	195
Oh ! banquet not in those shining bowers,	154
Oh ! blame not the bard, if he fly to the bowers,	52
Oh ! breathe not his name, let it sleep in the shade,	20
Oh ! could we do with this world of ours,	199
Oh ! doubt me not,	100
Oh ! for the swords of former time,	141
Oh ! had we some bright little isle of our own,	97
Oh ! haste and leave this sacred isle,	30
Oh ! the days are gone, when beauty bright,	67
Oh, the sight entrancing,	159
Oh ! think not my spirits are always as light,	25
Oh ! weep for the hour,	39
Oh ! where's the slave so lowly,	116
Oh, ye dead ! oh, ye dead ! whom we know,	150
One bumper at parting !—though many,	91
Quick ! we have but a second,	167
Remember the glories of Brian the brave,	19
Remember thee ? yes, while there's life in this heart,	131
Rich and rare were the gems she wore,	27
Sail on, sail on, thou fearless bark,	143
Shall the harp then be silent, when he who first gave,	157
She is far from the land where her young hero sleeps,	78
She sung of love, while o'er her lyre,	177

Silent, oh Moyle, be the roar of thy water,	22
Silence is in our festal halls,	205
Sing—sing—music was given,	179
Sing, sweet harp, oh sing to me,	181
Song of the battle eve,	183
Strike the gay harp! see, the moon is on high,	192
Sublime was the warning that Liberty spoke,	46
Sweet Innisfallen, fare thee well,	161
Take back the virgin page,	32
The dawning of morn, the daylight's sinking,	155
The dream of those days,	202
The harp that once through Tara's halls,	23
The minstrel boy to the war is gone,	94
The time I've lost in wooing,	115
The valley lay smiling before me,	95
The wandering bard	185
The wine-cup is circling in Almhin's hall,	200
The young May moon is beaming, love,	93
There is not in the wide world a valley so sweet,	29
There are sounds of mirth,	193
They came from a land beyond the sea,	190
They know not my heart, who believe there can be,	174
They may rail at this life—from the hour I began it,	139
This life is all chequered with pleasures and woes,	85
Though dark are our sorrows, to-day we'll forget them,	69
Though humble the banquet,	180
Though the last glimpse of Erin with sorrow I see,	26
Through Erin's Isle,	87
Through grief and through danger,	63
'Tis believed that this harp,	66
'Tis gone, and for ever, the light we saw breaking,	118

	PAGE
'Tis sweet to think, that where'er we rove,	61
'Tis the last rose of summer,	92
To ladies' eyes around, boy,	136
To-morrow, comrade, we,	183
'Twas one of those dreams that by music are brought,	163
 Weep on, weep on, your hour is past,	71
We may roam through this world, like a child at a feast,	37
What life like that of the bard can be,	185
What the bee is to the floweret,	83
When cold in the earth lies the friend thou hast loved,	131
When daylight was yet sleeping under the billow,	56
Whene'er I see those smiling eyes,	134
When first I met thee, warm and young,	111
When he who adores thee, has left but the name,	22
When in death I shall calm recline,	34
When through life, unblest we rove,	64
While gazing on the moon's light,	54
While History's muse the memorial was keeping,	113
Wreath the bowl,	132
 Yes, sad one of Sion—if closely resembling,	141
You remember Ellen, our hamlet's pride,	101

Butler's (New) Small Quarto Bible.

AN ENTIRELY NEW EDITION, STEREOGRAPHED FROM THE BIBLE SOCIETY STANDARD, IN SMALL QUARTO.

This edition, but seven by nine and a half inches in size, is printed upon pica type (the largest type used in any Quarto or Family Bible printed in the United States, excepting only Butler's Royal Quarto Bible), and contains marginal notes and references, the various readings, the Apocrypha, and a Family Record. The Illustrations are all from original designs by Schuessele, and are engraved in line in the first style of the art. The Illuminations are also from original designs by Devereux. The end aimed at in publishing this edition was to produce a Bible in large type in a small and convenient shape for reading. This has been accomplished, and it is believed to be the most elegant and convenient edition in the English language.

The following are the styles and retail prices. They are all printed on the same quality of paper, and differ only in Illustrations and in the style of binding.

H. Illustrated with 10 Coloured Engravings, and 8 new and splendid Illuminations. Turkey, super extra, bevelled boards,	$11.00
